WOMAN ROUTED OUT

Mrs. Ruby Williamson at Phone Calling for Help When Injured—Earlier Slapped Roomer Who Had Been Drinking.

Lee Onis Ross, 45-year-old railroad shopman who went on a drunken spree last night and shot and fatally wounded early today when he returned to his rooming house at 4123 Westminster place and attempted to fire on a policeman coming for him there.

His revolver failed to fire and in the ensuing struggle he was shot by Patrolman Harry Koch. He died at 4:30 a. m. at City Hospital, here the victim of his first outburst.

At the time, Mrs. Ruby Williamson, 27, is under treatment for wounds in the chest and left arm.

Ross, an electric welder employed by the Rock Island Railroad, had come home drunk yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Williamson's 19-year-old nephew, Paul Grogan, of St. Louis, Mo., a visitor at her home, said a Post-Dispatch reporter.

Nephew Tells Story.

"About 3 o'clock a couple of young fellows came and called on the roomers, Miss Jessie and I," he said. "They sat in the living room and played cards for a while with Aunt Ruby and me. They were drinking beer."

"Well, Aunt Ruby and Miss McNeil went out for about an hour. They got back in about an hour and went to bed in the front bedroom next to where I was sleeping. The living room was on a couch. After a while Ross came back and went into their room. As he went through the living room I saw he had a revolver."

"He could hear him say 'Jessie, I'm going to give you your first.' Miss McNeil ran out of the room and I saw him say, 'You get out here, I'm going to call the police.'"

At the Phone When Shot.

"I dare you," Ross said, and went to his room. Aunt Ruby went to the telephone in the living room right next to where I was sleeping and called the police. She gave them the name and address and she was still at the phone when Ross was rushing in."

"You'll get your own now, Ruby," he yelled. He fired at her three times. She screamed and he ran out of the house. A few minutes later the police got there."

Norris ordered the wounded woman taken to City Hospital. Patrolman Koch saw Ross at the house at 1:30 a. m. and went to the front door. As Ross put his key in the lock, Koch, who was in uniform, threw open the door. Ross stood there with the revolver in his right hand.

Patrolman Koch's Report.

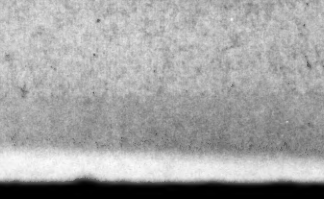

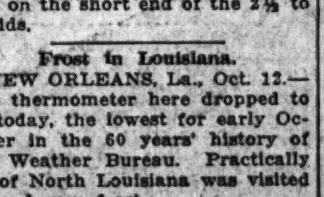

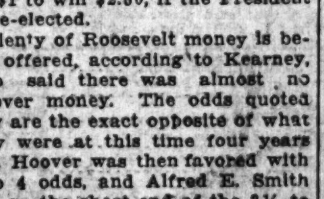

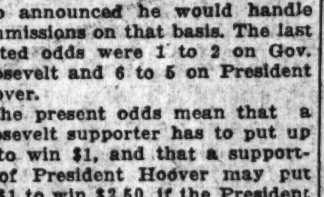

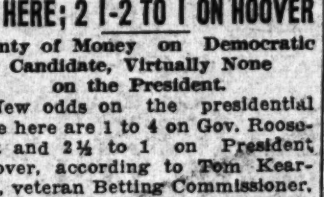

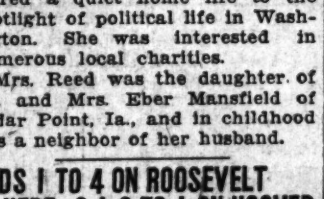

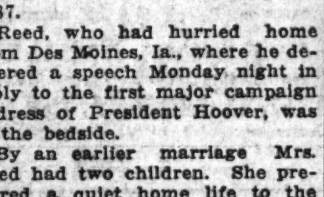

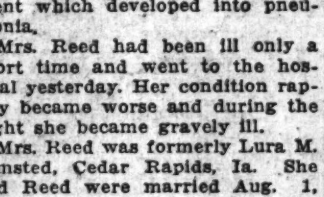

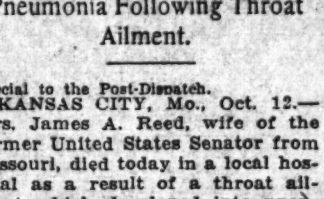

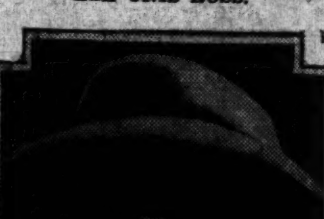

"You're under arrest," I said, and the policeman reported later, "He raised the revolver and said, 'I'm going to get all these people, and I'm going to shoot them.' He tried to get all these people, and I shot him without setting the cartridge off."

"I grabbed his wrist and told him to get away. I held on to his wrist and we tumbled down the stairs and over a terrace. Finally I managed to get my revolver and fired. He quit struggling. I dropped his revolver and kept firing. He was hit in the back. Ross had been hit in the back. He died without making a statement."

Mrs. Williamson and her husband were in the rooming house at the time.

TAYLORVILLE

200 Guardsmen Armed With Tent-Pegs Herd Strikers Into Square Preparatory to Marching Them Out of County.

2000 MORE PICKETS
STILL IN VICINITY

They Are Planning to Commemorate Virden Day, Sheriff Charles Wienke Says There Will Be No Services.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

TAYLORVILLE, Ill., Oct. 12.—Armed with tent-pegs, more than 200 National Guardsmen who had been patrolling the streets here all night, herded 2000 striking miners into the Courthouse square here today, preparatory to marching them out of Christian County.

Two thousand more pickets from outside the county still are in Taylorville and the nearby mining towns of Kincaid and Tovey, preparing for the Virden day services observed here each Oct. 13 in commemoration of Frank Bilyew, of Taylorville, who was killed in a mine riot in Virden in 1898 when the United Mine Workers of America was formed.

Sheriff Charles Wienke has announced that there will be no Virden day services today.

One attempted celebration at Oak Hill Cemetery was broken up by a woman's auxiliary of the Progressive Union to the cemetery was broken up by soldiers who interrupted it with trucks and automobiles. Several of the women, wearing uniform starved white caps, were among those arrested.

Many Small Encounters.

Herded the 2000 pickets into the square marked the culmination of a night of fights and minor violence. One miner reported he shot at a group of pickets who beat him; 100 pickets gathered around a miner's house were routed with tear gas and 4000 pickets were dispersed from around Peabody mine No. 58, late yesterday afternoon when the 150 miners working there left for the day.

Another company of the Illinois National Guard arrived at Taylorville early today and took part in rounding up those pickets found on the streets. No one was permitted on the streets who did not keep moving.

Observers of the herding reported that several dozen pickets were struck with tent pegs. "It didn't take much," one man reported. "They went down and when they got up again they went where they were told."

Those taken to the courthouse were questioned about the citizenship and residence. If they lived in the county, they were permitted to go home. If they lived outside the county and had automobiles, loaded with helmets, tent pegs and rifles with bayonets, escorted them to their machines, took the license numbers and names of the occupants and told them to leave the county. Transportation to the county line was furnished for those who did not have automobiles.

Tear Gas Disperses Pickets.

Tear gas was used to disperse pickets around 1115 West Vandeventer, the home of Bob Moody, a miner employed at No. 58. After Moody had sent in a riot call last night, Capt. Mark Plasted Jr. and men of a machine gun company went to his house to find him sitting on the front porch reading a newspaper while a crowd at the fence shouted oaths at him. He told Capt. Plasted a similar disturbance had occurred for three nights. Capt. Plasted ordered the crowd to leave twice and finally resorted to the use of gas.

Harry Roberts, miner at Tovey, 12 miles west of Taylorville, said he was not upset by four men near his home and beaten. After being knocked to the ground, he said he pressed his revolver against one of his assailants and fired. The other three then fled, taking the man Roberts said he wounded.

Rival Unions in Dispute.

The mine dispute here is between the United Mine Workers of America and the Progressive Miners of North America. The latter is a heavy frost.

PIKE'S PEAK LOSES
4 INCHES OF HEIGHT,
CLIMBER REPORTS

Summit Said to Be Lower Because Drought Caused Rocks to Slip.

By the Associated Press.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., Oct. 12.—Pike's Peak is several inches lower than it was last spring, and the drought is held responsible. The most recent geologic survey places the height of the peak at 14,109 feet. Lawrence Cockrell, veteran mountain climber, who was rescued from the snowbound summit house this month after the station was closed for the year, is the authority for the revised height.

Cockrell said the abnormally dry summer brought about sufficient evaporation and melting of ice underneath the summit pile of boulders to cause the rocks to slip and the summit to settle.

The foundation stones of the summit house were laid on ice. Each year the melting ice has let the building down slightly, but when the summit house staff affixed the steel door with which the main entrance to the building is secured during the winter, they found the settling of the building this summer amounted to four inches.

INCREASE OF 10,932 NEGRO
VOTERS IN CITY REGISTRATION

Gain for White Citizens During Last Four Years, 12,449; Total Now 138,477.

Analysis of the registration of voters last month, in preparation for next month's election, shows an increase of 10,932 Negro voters in St. Louis in the last four years and an increase of 12,449 white voters.

There are 46,082 Negroes enrolled now, an increase of 31.1 per cent since 1928, and 138,477 whites, an increase of 24.4 per cent. The aggregate gain for both races is 23,381, or 6.4 per cent. Total registration is 386,068.

Division of the present registration is as follows: White men, 144,047; white women, 150,295; Negro men, 12,476; Negro women, 12,674; total Negroes, 25,150; grand total, 262,672.

The current Negro registration is 9 per cent of the total of all voters enrolled. In 1928 Negroes comprised 8.6 per cent of the registration. In the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Nineteenth wards, the Negro registration now exceeds that of whites. There are more women of both races, chiefly whites, registered in the Fifteenth, Twenty-fifth and Twenty-eighth wards than men.

A small canvass of the registration in 140 of the 688 precincts, as a precaution against the possibility of fraud, was decided on today by the Election Board.

FRANCIS M. WILSON, DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR, DIES; COMMITTEE WILL FILL VACANCYNO CHOICE UNTIL AFTER FUNERAL,

Pending Burial of Nominee for State Executive.

The Democratic State Committee will nominate a candidate for Governor to fill the vacancy on the ticket caused by the death of Francis M. Wilson.

Chairman Ruben M. Hulien today said he will call the committee to meet in a nominating session as soon as possible. He said that of course the meeting will not be held until after the funeral of Mr. Wilson. The time of the funeral had not been determined today, but it was said that it must be held Saturday at Platte City, Mo. This would make it likely that the nominating convention would be one day next week.

The State Committee, which had been called to St. Louis by Chairman Hulien to hear reports and make campaign plans, was in session at the Marquette Hotel when word of Mr. Wilson's death was conveyed to the headquarters by the Post-Dispatch. Hulien was addressing the committee and could not be interrupted to answer the telephone. Judge Daniel G. Taylor of St. Louis, chairman of the Finance Committee, was given the information and he later informed Hulien.

The news came as a shock to the committee, when Hulien, after telephoning to Kansas City, informed it officially of the vacancy on the ticket. The session was immediately adjourned to meet at 2 o'clock for a discussion of the situation.

Hulien Eulogizes Wilson.

At the afternoon meeting Senator Harry B. Hawes made a short address eulogizing Mr. Wilson, whom he said he had known since 1899. He then suggested that the committee members return to their homes and come back later at the call of the chairman to nominate a man for Governor "of whom Mr. Wilson would be proud."

"It is very sad," he said, "that Senator Wilson could not live to enjoy the victory that was in sight. A committee was appointed by Chairman Hulien to draft resolutions on the death of Mr. Wilson and of Mrs. James A. Reed. Those appointed were Howard Cook of Jefferson City, Mrs. Mary E. Craven of Gallatin, vice-chairman of the State Committee, and Dr. H. F. Parker of Warrensburg. The committee then adjourned."

Several Possibilities.

As committee members and visiting Democrats talked in the hotel lobby and corridors, several prospective candidates were mentioned, but there were no indications that the committee had centered on any one man.

Russell L. Dearmont of Cape Girardeau, a member of the State Senate, who was defeated in the August primary for the nomination by Chairman Hulien, was mentioned. Dearmont carried St. Louis but lost the State by 137,000, of which Kansas City and Jackson County furnished about 100,000. Some committee members thought that because of the bitter fight he made on Wilson, who was the choice of the Pendergast-Kansas City machine, Dearmont would not be selected.

Former State Senator Frank G. Harris, the nominee for Lieutenant-Governor, was mentioned. If he should be selected he would have to withdraw as candidate for Lieutenant-Governor and that vacancy would be filled by the committee.

Another suggestion was Lloyd V. Stark of Louisiana, Mo., who is a relative by marriage of Harris. Circuit Attorney Franklin Miller of Francis M. Wilson.

By the Associated Press.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 12.—Francis M. Wilson, 55 years old, Democratic candidate for Governor of Missouri, died today at 9:10 a. m. of internal hemorrhage suffered after he apparently recovered from a severe injury to his back, which interrupted his campaign.

The Democratic State Committee will choose a successor to Mr. Wilson as the gubernatorial nominee.

The unexpected death of the candidate shocked friends and Democratic leaders. State party headquarters at Jefferson City announced all Democratic campaign addresses had been canceled until after the funeral which will take place in Platte City, place of Mr. Wilson's birth and his official residence.

Mr. Wilson had chosen today to resume his political activities, after several weeks recovering from a bruised back, suffered when a taxicab he was entering here started suddenly. He had planned to return to Platte City to begin a campaign today, at the home of his cousin, Dr. Wilson Murray.

Dismissed His Nurse.

He felt so much better last night that he dismissed his nurse before retiring. At 3 o'clock this morning he suffered a hemorrhage which so alarmed Mrs. Wilson she called the candidate's brother, Dr. R. P. C. Wilson, his cousin, Dr. Murray, from Platte City, and Dr. C. C. Conover, his family physician.

Four hours later the candidate suffered a second and more severe hemorrhage. He weakened rapidly and soon lost consciousness, dying an hour later.

The exact cause of death could not be determined without an autopsy, attending physicians said. It was said that Mr. Wilson had been suffering from cancer of the stomach. However, pending an autopsy, physicians ascribed his death to gastric ulcer.

His concern over the campaign apparently occupied Mr. Wilson's last thoughts, and was the subject of his last expression. Just before losing consciousness, the candidate turned to his wife and instructed her: "Be sure to see that my assessment to the State Committee is paid."

Worried by Inactivity.

He had worried continually because of his inability to take the stump in behalf of himself and his party.

"My enemies have said that I would be unable to carry on this campaign. It looks now as if the people will think those enemies were right and that I had misled them," he told friends recently.

The injury which Mr. Wilson suffered in the sudden starting of a cab, was painful, but was not regarded by his physician as dangerous. Torn and strained back muscles made it difficult for him to move about.

For several weeks Mr. Wilson

RIOTS IN BELFAST BREAK OUT ANEW; QUICKLY PUT DOWN

Police in Armored Cars Charge and Rout Mob of Unemployed in Northern Ireland City.

REGULAR TROOPS ARE CALLED OUT

Lord Mayor and Representatives of the Jobless Confer on Giving of Relief Benefits.

By the Associated Press.
BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Oct. 12.—Troops were sent here today when rioting by the unemployed broke out afresh. The first outbreak which occurred yesterday was suppressed after one man had been killed and 30 injured. The quiet continued throughout the early morning and afternoon until about 11 a. m., when shooting broke out again in the Falls road district.

A bus was wrecked by the mob and every available armored car was brought into use by the police. The crowds retreated before the charge of armored cars manned by police, however, and quiet was restored again.

A detachment of the Inniskilling Fusiliers was brought in from the barracks at Holywood and it was announced that the King's Royal Rifles would arrive Friday.

Street cars and buses which discontinued service last night were running during the early forenoon.

Wholesale arrests were made during the morning. In one street alone police arrested 39 persons. It is understood plainclothes constables mingled with the mob during the riots, noted who the participants were and bided their time.

Where trenches had been dug in the streets the occupants of nearby houses were ordered to fill them in, but policemen eventually did the work.

A conference between the Lord Mayor and representatives of the unemployed began in the town hall at noon in the hope of finding some satisfactory basis for outdoor relief benefits over which the disturbance began.

Although constant sniping on the police continued in the Falls road district through the night, the police enforced the curfew law strictly after 11 o'clock. A corn of police was drawn around the entire city, through which no one was allowed to pass until daybreak to day.

There were 12 outbreaks of firing during the evening. Until 11 p. m. thousands of persons thronged the streets but they went home unwillingly when policemen began to round up everybody they found abroad after the curfew.

In Albert street there was some shooting when a mob raided a bakery wagon. A detachment of policemen charged with clubs, but the fighting was so fierce that another police group was obliged to fire before the crowd dispersed. No one was wounded by the shots.

In Leeson street policemen had to fire again when a mob attacked them with bricks and bottles. No serious injuries were reported in that skirmish.

The Press Association, one of the large British news agencies, said the Belfast police thought that Communism was at the root of the trouble.

A high police official was quoted as having said to a Press Association correspondent: "This is no genuine working class movement. They don't go around throwing stones at policemen. Many of the worst men we have to handle are men who never have done a day's work in their lives. We know many of the tough customers, and unfortunately they have got at the decent poor."

It is estimated that there are 100,000 unemployed in the Belfast district.

had been leaving his home on errands incident to the campaign, however.

Four years ago Mr. Wilson underwent a major operation at Rochester, Minn., because of a duodenal ulcer.

Mr. Wilson had no children. Dr. Wilson is his only surviving brother.

Mr. Wilson's body probably will be taken to Platte City late today.

WILSON'S CAREER LEGAL, POLITICAL

FRANCIS M. WILSON'S legal and political career, extending over a period of more than 40 years, was limited by physical infirmities.

He won a nomination for Congress in 1904, but became ill and was unable to make a campaign, so lost his district by a close vote. In 1918, as the Democratic nominee for Governor, he was prevented by sickness from making an active campaign, and could do nothing to keep the Hoover landslide from defeating him and his associates on the Democratic State ticket. In the present year, he was able to make a few pre-primary speeches, and hoped to make an active campaign

HELD FOR SHORTAGE

IS ARRESTED FOR $6160 SHORTAGE

Two Warrants to Be Issued Against George N. Grate of Lafayette South Side Depository.

By the Associated Press.
ST. LOUIS, Oct. 12.—George N. Grate, a teller at the Lafayette South Side Bank, was arrested at his home, 5450 South Kingshighway, last night, at the request of Assistant Circuit Attorney Griffin, who announced he would issue two warrants against the teller, charging him with embezzlement of $6160.

Grate, taken into custody at 7:30 o'clock, was released a short time later on $10,000 bond. He declined to discuss the case with police.

Griffin said that Grate, who is 37 years old, has been employed by the bank 16 years, and that he told officers of the bank after a shortage in his account was discovered that he had been living beyond his means.

Lived Beyond Means.
"Apparently he has no bad habits," the Assistant Circuit Attorney continued. "He doesn't gamble, he said, but he's been spending more than he makes. He supports his mother and mother-in-law, who live with him."

The shortage was discovered last Thursday, when one of the bank's customers came in to complain that his bank book didn't balance—that it showed he had $6000 less than he actually had. Grate was questioned about a shortage that day, but denied any knowledge of it.

"Last Friday the bank officers refused to let him enter his cage, and sent auditors in there in his place. They found the $6000 shortage and under a money tray deposit slips for $1160 which had not been entered."

Grate's Name Forged.
"Then he told the bank officers that he was short. He said on the $6000 amount he had been really short only $400, but he had made up the balance by forging deposit slips for $2000. He said he was also short the $1160, and was making entries of deposits a day or two late in order to cover up. On the 25th acquittal."

In 1928 he was elected to the State Senate to fill a vacancy, and was the youngest member of the Senate of 1929. He was chairman of the Senate Revision Committee. He was elected to the Senate again in 1930 and 1932, but did not serve out his last term, resigning in 1933 to accept appointment by President Woodrow Wilson as United States District Attorney for the Western District of Missouri. He was reappointed in 1937.

In October, 1920 he resigned the position of attorney to become receiver for the Kansas City Railway Co. He served in charge of the street railway property for nearly six years.

Ran for Governor in 1928.
Former Senator Wilson was the nomination for Governor in the 1928 primary over State Senator McCawley of Carthage. McCawley, however, was defeated by the incumbent, Governor H. R. McCreary.

In this year's primary, Mr. Wilson's health, and the backing given him by the Democratic organization in Kansas City, were topics of discussion. Mr. Wilson declared in several speeches that he was "unfettered" politically, and that he hoped to have sufficient strength for the campaign and for the duties of Governor. He won by a decisive vote both in Kansas City and in the State at large, though losing St. Louis to Senator Deamont by a small margin.

He is survived by his widow, formerly Ida Elizabeth Cockrell of Platte County, and a granddaughter of the late Gov. Garrard of Kentucky.

James P. Aylward, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, issued a statement in which he said: "The Democracy of the State was very much shocked to hear of the untimely death of Francis M. Wilson. The people have lost a very fine citizen, who, if he had survived and been elected Governor, would have made Missouri a most outstanding and distinguished executive, in my judgment."

Committee of State Senators Named to Attend Funeral.

NAME-CALLING STAGE REACHED IN CAMPAIGN

Hoover, James A. Reed, Garner and Coolidge
Open Fire in Direct Attacks
on Opponents.

By CHARLES G. ROSS,
Chief Washington Correspondent
of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Those voters who enjoy a campaign in which the speakers, as they say in Oklahoma, "pour it on" the other fellow, will have their hearts' desire today in the remainder of the election. The calling of names has begun, and it bids fair to continue with increasing fervor right down to election day.

President Hoover, at Des Moines devoted a large part of his address to a direct attack on his opponents, with special reference to the "destructive" program of the Democratic leadership in the House of Representatives.

Former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, from the same rostrum, went the President one better by railing against the "destructive" long list of charges that Reed has been hurling at Hoover ever since the Food Administration days.

Democrat's Forgotten Man.
John Garner, who seems to be the forgotten man of the Democratic Speakers' Bureau, delivered himself of this statement that "pork is not pork when it is served by Mr. Hoover."

And now comes Calvin Coolidge with his oblique attack of last night on Franklin Roosevelt. He didn't name Roosevelt, but his New York audience and his radio listeners knew whom he was hitting at when he said of Herbert Hoover that "he was not born to the enjoyment of generations of inherited wealth so that he could be educated by private tutors and sent through expensive schools and universities. He never was carried into political office by the way of family influence. He has always had to depend on his own name and reputation."

The shot at Roosevelt apparently got more applause from the Madison Square rally than anything else the former President said. Party leaders here are predicting today that when Roosevelt sails forth in the Middle West he will drop some of the amiability that characterized his earlier handling of his opponents and will lash out in the prevailing October manner.

Strategy of Democrats.
It is the strategy of the Democrats to keep the offensive if possible. Reed's Des Moines speech and that of Coolidge last night, it is the intention of the Republicans to run a sharp counter-offensive, based largely on the charge that the President's post-mortem on the gold reserve was of last winter and spring has had the effect of breaking down foreign confidence in the dollar.

Similarly, as indicated by the President's Des Moines speech and that of Coolidge last night, it is the intention of the Democrats to keep the offensive if possible. Reed's Des Moines speech and that of Coolidge last night, it is the intention of the Republicans to run a sharp counter-offensive, based largely on the charge that the President's post-mortem on the gold reserve was of last winter and spring has had the effect of breaking down foreign confidence in the dollar.

Mr. Hoover is expected to develop that theme again at Cleveland Saturday night, when he will try to placate the unemployed.

Apparently the first step in extension of the campaign of the United States. On the basis of these documents, however, without a passport, it would be impossible for him to enter any other country. Consequently, if he surrenders the document, State Department officials think he will be isolated in Greece.

Officials refused to discuss what further step would be taken if In-sull refused to yield his passport. No reply was given to questions by newspaper men whether the department would circulate an announcement that the In-sull passport was invalid.

Under the system of "taking up" a passport, the United States Consulate abroad are instructed to take over the document from the holder. In the event the holder refuses to surrender it, it would be taken up the next time he applied for a renewal of his passport at a consulate.

In the In-sull code, for instance, the users had agreed to write the letter H when the letter E is indicated in the spelling of a word, the letter B for N, and so on through the alphabet.

In deciphering the code, investigators were aided by the fact they knew the subject of one message was extradition. Counting the letter of two code words showed they were of the same length as the word extradition. Thus H-R-D-X-N-C-A-D-A-G-B-E-C-X-T-R-A-D-I-T-I-O-N.

With these letters as the base of the key, the others were worked out until the entire code alphabet was made plain.

The text of the message to Samuel In-sull Jr., "Sam In-sull should comply with any request of the State Department. Have told John P. Wilson that I cannot consent in reduction of service annuity without your consent following conference with Samuel In-sull Jr. Gilbered wealth so that he could be educated by private tutors and sent through expensive schools and universities. He never was carried into political office by the way of family influence. He has always had to depend on his own name and reputation."

Mr. Hoover is expected to develop that theme again at Cleveland Saturday night, when he will try to placate the unemployed.

Apparently the first step in extension of the campaign of the United States. On the basis of these documents, however, without a passport, it would be impossible for him to enter any other country. Consequently, if he surrenders the document, State Department officials think he will be isolated in Greece.

Officials refused to discuss what further step would be taken if In-sull refused to yield his passport. No reply was given to questions by newspaper men whether the department would circulate an announcement that the In-sull passport was invalid.

Under the system of "taking up" a passport, the United States Consulate abroad are instructed to take over the document from the holder. In the event the holder refuses to surrender it, it would be taken up the next time he applied for a renewal of his passport at a consulate.

In the In-sull code, for instance, the users had agreed to write the letter H when the letter E is indicated in the spelling of a word, the letter B for N, and so on through the alphabet.

In deciphering the code, investigators were aided by the fact they knew the subject of one message was extradition. Counting the letter of two code words showed they were of the same length as the word extradition. Thus H-R-D-X-N-C-A-D-A-G-B-E-C-X-T-R-A-D-I-T-I-O-N.

With these letters as the base of the key, the others were worked out until the entire code alphabet was made plain.

The shot at Roosevelt apparently got more applause from the Madison Square rally than anything else the former President said. Party leaders here are predicting today that when Roosevelt sails forth in the Middle West he will drop some of the amiability that characterized his earlier handling of his opponents and will lash out in the prevailing October manner.

NAME-CALLING STAGE REACHED IN CAMPAIGN

Hoover, James A. Reed, Garner and Coolidge
Open Fire in Direct Attacks
on Opponents.

By CHARLES G. ROSS,
Chief Washington Correspondent
of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Those voters who enjoy a campaign in which the speakers, as they say in Oklahoma, "pour it on" the other fellow, will have their hearts' desire today in the remainder of the election. The calling of names has begun, and it bids fair to continue with increasing fervor right down to election day.

President Hoover, at Des Moines devoted a large part of his address to a direct attack on his opponents, with special reference to the "destructive" program of the Democratic leadership in the House of Representatives.

Former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, from the same rostrum, went the President one better by railing against the "destructive" long list of charges that Reed has been hurling at Hoover ever since the Food Administration days.

Democrat's Forgotten Man.
John Garner, who seems to be the forgotten man of the Democratic Speakers' Bureau, delivered himself of this statement that "pork is not pork when it is served by Mr. Hoover."

And now comes Calvin Coolidge with his oblique attack of last night on Franklin Roosevelt. He didn't name Roosevelt, but his New York audience and his radio listeners knew whom he was hitting at when he said of Herbert Hoover that "he was not born to the enjoyment of generations of inherited wealth so that he could be educated by private tutors and sent through expensive schools and universities. He never was carried into political office by the way of family influence. He has always had to depend on his own name and reputation."

The shot at Roosevelt apparently got more applause from the Madison Square rally than anything else the former President said. BORAH PROPOSES 4-POINT PROGRAM TO REVIVE TRADE

Says Essentials Are Restoration of Markets, Monetary Reform, Economy, Debt Adjustment.

By the Associated Press.
BURLEY, Idaho, Oct. 12.—United States Senator William E. Borah (Rep.), Idaho, in an address here last night advocated a four-point program for economic recovery—restoration of world markets, expansion of the currency, elimination of extravagance in Government, and adjustment of private debts to conform to the change in money values.

Addressing a meeting arranged by a local service club, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations suggested sufficient expansion of the currency "to do business and afford the people a medium of exchange."
Borah said he would present his views without regard to party platforms or the presidential campaign in which thus far he has withheld support from President Hoover.
"There are a number of questions, local and national, which one might well discuss," he said. "But the great fundamental problems, upon which all others depend, are: "First—World markets have been destroyed and the great problem is: how to restore them. Until we do so, we cannot hope for a rise in the price of commodities."
"Second—The monetary systems of the world have been broken up and demoralized and the problem is: how to restore them, and how to adapt them to present conditions. Until we do so, we cannot hope for that confidence which brings prosperity to business."
"Third—The last 25 years have witnessed such an increase of waste and extravagance in the government from the lowest unit of government to the highest, that taxes are now literally destructive to our own property to invite ruin. The expenditure of public money approaches a national crime.

"Fourth—By reason of adverse economic forces and the change in money values, debts have piled up beginning with the farm and ending with Government, until men are no longer working with a view to build, to construct, to develop, but to pay, as it were, for a dead horse.
"These are the problems for which answer must be found."

PATROLMAN WHO SHOT YOUTH REINSTATED IN BRENTWOOD

William Skow Under Indictment for Wounding Levi Graham, Negro, Two Months Ago.
Motorcycle Patrolman William Skow of the Brentwood police department, who was suspended from duty and indicted for shooting Levi Graham, 18-year-old Webster Groves Negro two months ago, was reinstated to duty last night following a hearing by the Board of Aldermen with attorneys for Skow and the City of Brentwood.

The hearing disclosed, according to Mayor Jacob Sprinkle of Brentwood, that Skow shot Graham in good faith and in the performance of his duty. The indictment, which still stands, was returned by the county grand jury.
Skow sought to question Graham at night in Brentwood. Graham did not halt and Skow shot him in the back after firing a shot in the air. It has never been disclosed that Graham, who has recovered, violated any law.

Taking up other business, the Board of Aldermen began discussion of a proposal to install 72 fire plugs in the City of Brentwood under a 20-year franchise for the installation to the St. Louis County Water Co. The maintenance cost of the plugs will be $45 apiece per year. Final action on the proposal will be submitted to a vote of the citizens.

WANTS YOUNG TAUGHT CRIME DOESN'T PAY

Circuit Attorney Miller Would Have Course in Schools to Show Futility of Wrongdoing.

Instruction in the grade schools on the futility of a life of crime was advocated by Circuit Attorney Franklin Miller last night at the Founder's Day dinner in the Downtown W. M. C. A. He addressed about 500 business men gathered in celebration of the 11th anniversary of the birth of Sir George Williams, who founded the Y. M. C. A. 88 years ago in London.

Such instruction is needed, the State's prosecutor said, because of the increasing participation of youths in major crimes. One-third of the felony convictions obtained by his office in the three years ended Jan. 1 concerned youths between the ages of 17 and 21, Miller said, and 44 per cent of those convicted were between the ages of 17 and 27.

"It seems quite impossible," Miller said, "to drill into the heads of young people that crime doesn't pay. Boys don't seem to realize what foolhardy acts they are committing, they either fail to read of convictions through the newspapers, or they believe they can beat the game."

The earnings of criminals in dollars and cents make crime the poorest paid business in the world, Miller said, illustrating this point by an analysis of 244 robbery convictions in 1930. The total loot in these robberies was $24,753 and the average sentence upon conviction was 3.23 years.

"That being the case," he concluded, "these men are serving their time at an average of $10.45 a year." Not all of the robbers fared even that well, he added, for in only 46 of the 244 cases did the loot amount to $100 or more. Sixty per cent of them netted less than $50, and in most cases the loot was less than $15.

"This means," Miller said, "that these are being paid at the rate of about $11.5 a year. One robber received a 10-year sentence for a 20-cent holdup. His compensation is 3 cents a year."

Crimes of violence now predominate, Miller said, while 15 years ago most of those brought into court were charged with fictive crimes, such as confidence games, forgery, grand larceny and the like.

The best place to begin reformation of criminals, he said, is in the home, for loosening of home ties is an important factor in the increase of crime among youths. The best talking point many youthful robbers can advance, he added, is "a good mother and a worthless father."

In large cities such as St. Louis, he said, character building organizations such as the Y. M. C. A. are of inestimable value in curbing dishonesty and lawlessness.

An "anti-crime teacher" in every grade school would be most effective, Miller said. He would have every adolescent boy told in plain language just what constituted a murder and what are its consequences. Robbery with a deadly weapon, with its possibilities of murder would be explained in detail, and he would have pictures of prisons and prison life shown to students. The family and personal diagrams which follow crime would be emphasized.

"We have fine buildings, efficient teachers, brilliant principals and modern text books," Miller said, "but so far as I know we are without a real course in citizenship. Our pupils study and make excellent marks in history and civit government, but one of the most important phases in human relationships is left untouched. We do not teach our children what a criminal is and what it means to be a criminal."

Dr. Arnold Lowe, pastor of the Kingshighway Presbyterian Church, was the other speaker at the meeting. His talk was a eulogy of the life of Sir George. Frank C. Rand, chairman of the board of International Shoe Co., presided.

BOY KILLED BY TRUCK

DURING FIRE DRILL
Harry Hess Jr., 13, Struck When He Darts Out of Line Into Street.

Harry Hess Jr., 13 years old, was killed yesterday afternoon when struck by a motor truck while participating in a fire drill with other pupils of Hancock School, on Edgar avenue in Luxembourg. A coroner's verdict of accident was returned today.

The children were marching out of the building at 3:15 o'clock when Harry, for some unexplained reason, ran into the street police were told. He was run over by a truck driven by Carl J. Seibert, a chauffeur, of 4210 Ridgewood avenue. The boy got up and reached the hospital, where he was pronounced dead by Dr. W. A. Alexander, a physician.

Said death resulted from a crushed chest. Seibert said he was driving at moderate speed and averted sharply in an effort to avoid striking the boy who, the driver asserted, darted into the path of the truck.

The boy lived at 1810 Wachtel avenue, Luxembourg, with his parents.

John McElvain, Illinois Candidate, Injured in Crash, Dies.
John McElvain, Democratic nominee for the Illinois State Senate from the Fifty-first District, died today at Missouri Baptist Hospital from injuries suffered Monday in an automobile accident.

McElvain, a farmer who lived near Broughton, Ill., suffered a fractured spine when his automobile left the road near his home and overturned. He was taken to the hospital early yesterday. He was 45 years old.

Girl, 5, Seriously Injured When Struck by Auto.
Theresa, 5-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul J. Miller, 5529A Southwest avenue, suffered concussion of the brain when she was struck by an automobile near her home yesterday afternoon. The driver was Paul Frye, 6822 Maurice avenue.

Boy Seriously Hurt by Auto After Alighting From Another Car.
Milton Janaszak, 6, was struck and seriously injured by an automobile today a moment after he and four other boys had alighted from an automobile driven by his uncle, Arthur Boehm, at the Grant School in Fairview, eight miles east of East St. Louis.

Milton, whose father is Stephen Janaszak, a blacksmith near Fairview, was taken to St. Mary's Hospital by the driver of the machine which struck him, who said he was Earl Potter, 1925 North Twynga, first street, East St. Louis. The boy was unconscious, and physicians said he had a head injury and internal injuries.

Richard Dean, 5, 2421 South Third street, suffered a compound fracture of the right leg and a skull injury when knocked down by a metal safety cone marker, which was struck by a motor truck at Broadway and Barton streets yesterday afternoon. Richard, on his way home from school at 3:30 o'clock, shoved the safety marker against a wheel of the truck, police were informed. The marker rebounded, knocking the boy to the pavement. The driver was George Rupprecht, 4761 Idaho avenue. Richard is in City Hospital.

Three persons were injured in a collision between two automobiles at Prange and Thrush avenues last night. They were: Miss Edna Eberhart, 17, 5091 Union boulevard, skull injury; Richard Furlong, 19, 5077 Clanton avenue, scalp wounds; Herman Benz, 5011 Thrush avenue, cuts and bruises.

OLD 6TH DISTRICT OF MISSOURI GOING AGAINST HOOVER

No Great Enthusiasm for Roosevelt but Vast Amount of Criticism of President.

By CURTIS A. BETTS,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

CLINTON, Mo., Oct. 12.—Analysis of political conditions in the old Sixth Missouri Congressional District, as in other agricultural regions of the State, results in the distinct impression that if the Roosevelt victory expected in Missouri by the politicians assumes landslide proportions, it will be anti-Hoover and not pro-Roosevelt, though, of course, Roosevelt will reap the advantage.

None of the frenzy of the old Bryan days or of the Teddy Roosevelt days is to be found at the forks of the creeks of Missouri or on the farms or in the courthouse yard groups in the small towns.
There is no wild enthusiasm for Roosevelt. There is a vast amount of sullen criticism of Hoover.

This protest vote will represent the views of an enormous number of farmers, wage earners and merchants dependent for prosperity on prosperous farm and labor conditions, who will vote for Roosevelt in the belief that that is the only practical way their resentment can be effectively expressed. The voters, as in 1920 and in 1928, are not for—they are against.

Reasons for Protest Sentiment.
In 1924 the normal Democratic majority switched to a majority for Harding. It was a war protest, not an enthusiasm for Harding. In 1928 the district went nearly 15-000 for Hoover, a protest of Protestant rural Missouri against electing a Catholic to the presidency, not an enthusiasm for Hoover.
Now it is a protest against those who are "in" at a time of low prices for farm products and unemployment.

A Democratic leader here, when asked his opinion of the reason of the very evident protest/sentiment, replied: "It's easy to explain. In 1930 there were foreclosures of mortgages on 24 farms in Henry County. In 1931 the number of foreclosures was 28. So far this year the number has been 32, and unless something happens pretty quickly, there will be several times that number next year. The farmer who spends more in raising a crop than he gets for it can't pay the interest on his mortgage. He is broke and the merchants in all these towns dependent on an agricultural community are either going broke or are merely able to hang on."

Through training and inclination a majority of the voters of the Sixth District probably are Democrats, notwithstanding the fact that in every election beginning with 1910 the district has been carried by the Republican candidate for the Presidency. Prior to 1920 it was the customary thing for the Democratic candidate to lead by from 3000 to 5000 in this district.
Bryan carried it in 1908 by 1954
and Wilson in 1916 by 3023.

In 1920 Harding had a majority of 3613, and in 1924 Coolidge a majority of 59. Many Democrats, dissatisfied with Davis, remained at home on election day that year. In 1928 Hoover's majority was 14,452.

Democratic This Year.
In the opinion of political leaders throughout the district there is no doubt that it will return to the Democratic column this year. An analysis of the opinions of many Democrats and Republicans leads to the view that a Roosevelt majority of about 5000 is as nearly an accurate estimate as is possible a month before the election.

The politicians are beginning to hedge on their earlier views somewhat. A few weeks there was talk that Roosevelt would carry the district by a considerably larger majority than 5000, but one now hears of this, that and the other Republican, vociferous a few months ago in their declarations of intention to vote for Roosevelt, who has subsided and who probably will vote the Republican ticket. There is not enough of this, however, to change the view that the district will go Democratic.

MEXICO TO GET $10,000,000 LOAN FROM OIL COMPANIES
Advance to Be Retired Over Short Period of Years, as Concerns Taxes Fall Due.

By the Associated Press.
MEXICO CITY, Oct. 12.—The Treasury Department said today a $10,000,000 tax advance loan by three or four major oil companies operating in Mexico had virtually been completed, following conferences recently between oil officials and Secretary of the Treasury Alberto J. Pani.

It was reported here that the deal is being handled by the Chase National Bank of New York, which would advance the money at 4% per cent interest to be retired over a short period of years as the oil taxes fall due.

WASTE IN RAILWAY COMPETITION IN CANADA ASSAILED

Report of Royal Commission Says Roads Might Better Have Co-Operated to Meet Truck Competition.

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 12.—The Royal Commission on Transportation reported to the House of Commons yesterday that Canadian railways have been indulging in wasteful competition when they should have been co-operating to meet the menace of highway traffic.

This report was made only a few weeks after Sir Henry Thornton had resigned as president of the Canadian National Railways, the publicly owned rival of the Canadian Pacific.

When he stepped down, Sir Henry conceded the activity of the Royal Commission was partly responsible. "Public criticism," he said, "was given as another reason."

The report analyzed the plight of the railways from every angle and suggested several remedies. The analysis found no direct political and public pressure on officers of the Canadian National, but added:

"It was in the larger sphere of policy that political considerations led to unwise and unnecessary capital expenditures. When considering the scale upon which branch line extensions and acquisitions as well as hotel expenditures were made, and railway and steamship services duplicated, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the board of directors and the management of the Canadian National Railways were amenable to political influence and pressure which it would have been in the public interest to have withstood."

"Long Pause of the State."

The report said one of the competitors was "backed by the long purse of the State" and thus in a position to make large expenditures.

The remedy for this specific situation was declared to be cessation of aggressive and uncontrolled competition between the two great Canadian railway systems.

Further recommendations included:

1. A suggestion that the capital of the Canadian National be written down heavily from its present $2,300,000,000, but not until an opportune time presented itself to the proposed commission of management.

(The investigating commission previously had recommended that the Canadian National board be supplanted by a railway commission of three members.)

2. As to Free Transportation. Where the statute imposes obligations on the railways to provide free transportation to Members of Parliament, of the provincial legislators and their dependents, etc., the state should pay the cost.

3. A fair basis of competition as between the railways and the motor bus and truck used as common carriers must be found. The railways should be empowered to provide and operate services of road vehicles, and licenses should be granted to common carriers using the highways only where it is in the public interest.

4. A joint inquiry might be held with representation by both the Federal and Provincial governments to promote agreement on the general principles which should govern the regulation and taxation of motor vehicles using the public highways.

5. If the railways lose a large part of their profitable short-distance traffic to the roads (highways), a readjustment of the whole freight structure may be necessary, with a possible increase in the rates charged for the long distance and heavy traffic.

6. No direct recommendation as to abandonment of lines is made, but the report incorporates the views of both the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National.

Among the general opinions given by the commission were these:

1. The private automobile is responsible chiefly for the diversion of passenger traffic from the railway to the highway.

2. The construction of the St. Lawrence waterway will not seriously prejudice the position of Canada's railways in the future.

3. At the moment any adjustment of freight tolls and tariffs would not be advisable.

Among the commissioners was E. F. Loree, the president of the Delaware & Hudson Railway.

The total increase on debt account of the Canadian National Railways from Jan. 1, 1922, to Dec. 31, 1931, was $224,671,415, the report said. Over the same period the Canadian Pacific Railway increased its capital securities by $282,258,775, of which $25,181,555 was allotted to ocean service.

Bankruptcy Case Dismissed.

A motion to dismiss an involuntary bankruptcy petition filed against the Bookman Millinery Co. was sustained by Federal Judge Davis Monday. It was shown at a hearing that one of the petitioning creditors, F. X. Dugal, did not have a claim of $400 against the company, as stated in the petition, but only $60. The company's attorney was not given in the court papers.

GETS $21,000 LEGACY BECAUSE OF HIS ARREST AS VAGRANT

New York Herald Tribune Tells Story and Gets Money to Go to England.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—Because Alfred Richard Hugo was arrested for vagrancy last week he sailed for England today to claim a legacy of $21,000 ($21,000).

Picked up with 12 other homeless men who had sought refuge from the rain in a subway station, Hugo told a court that the money had been left him by an uncle he never had seen, John Pike, a transient diamond operator.

Hugo said he was informed of the bequest in 1923, that its terms required him to return to Southampton, where he has a wife and two daughters, but that he never had been able to finance the trip.

Capt. Reginald Jaffray, retired United States Army officer and writer, read of the case in the newspapers. He obtained Hugo's release and advanced him the price of his passage.

MOORE ON COLUMBUS DAY

President Sends "Cordial Greetings" to Italian-Americans.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—President Hoover yesterday sent his "cordial greetings" to Italian-Americans of the country in a statement commemorating the celebration of Columbus day. The President's statement:

"The annual celebration of Columbus day serves not only to commemorate the glorious achievement of the great discoverer, but also to remind the millions of his compatriots who have followed him to these shores of the blessings they have found in this land of hope and opportunity. They, on their part, have enriched our national life in terms of art, letters, and many of the most useful constructive occupations. I send them my cordial greetings."

GUY A. THOMPSON TELLS BAR JUSTICE DEPENDS ON AROUSED PUBLIC OPINION

President of Association Indicts the People for Their Departure From Fundamental Principles of Government.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Guy A. Thompson of St. Louis, president of the American Bar Association, made an address here today in which he listed and answered the public's complaints against the lawyers.

Then he called the public before the bar and arraigned it for indifference to its own affairs and for a long list of departures from fundamental principles of our government, threatening to destroy it. He called for leadership, self-sacrificing and courageous. "We must save ourselves," he said. "Political parties cannot save us; the Constitution cannot save us; the Supreme Court cannot save us. An enlightened, aroused, and irresistible public opinion is our only hope."

Thompson spoke to 1500 delegates at the opening of the annual convention of the American Bar Association in Constitution Hall where President Hoover will address the organization tonight at 8 o'clock. The title he gave to his speech was "The Lawyer the Layman and the Public Good."

Public Indictment of Bar. There were three counts, he said, in the public's indictment of the bar:

First, that justice and the law are uncertain. Second, that the bar is slothful in ridding the profession of unscrupulous members. Third, that the legal profession does nothing to improve the administration of justice.

The third count he denied emphatically, enumerating the activities of the association, with its 30,000 members, and of state bar associations in behalf of higher educational and ethical standards for the profession and for simplification of the law and of procedure of the courts.

As to the uncertainty of justice and the law, he admitted the charge, although he thought the layman likely to magnify the seriousness of the offense because of the emphasis given by the press to the comparatively few cases possessing news value.

"It is true that the law is uncertain," he said. "It will ever be so. It is the glory of the common law that its principles adapt themselves to the imperative demands of social change. Law must be static, and yet it cannot stand still," says Dean Pound (Harvard). Or, as Mr. Justice Cardozo (U. S. Supreme Court) charmingly phrased it: "The law that shelters for the night is not the journey's end. The law like the traveler, must be ready for the morrow. It must have a principle of growth."

Simplifying Law Forms. He told of the work under way by the American Law Institute, composed of leading lawyers of the country, to state the common law in simpler, clearer form, better adapted to the social conditions of the present.

"To the layman's second complaint, that the bar is slothful in ridding the profession of unscrupulous members," said Thompson, "it must be conceded that the legal profession includes some whose conduct violates the canons of ethics, some who are recreant to their trusts, some who 'crook the pregnant hinges of the knee where thrift may follow fawning.' But these men do not represent or typify the profession; they dishonor it."

Here he called attention to the difficulties in the way of disbarring undesirable lawyers, and said that the people alone could supply the remedy, for in many cases they had placed the control in their legislatures.

Difficulties of Disbarment. "The necessary proof (to disbar) is often hard, sometimes impossible, to obtain," he said, "though suspicion of wrongdoing be strong as proof of Holy Writ." Beyond this barrier, a more difficult one still is the fact that the bars in most of the states are not self-governing bodies. Indifferent to the inherent power of the courts, the state legislatures generally have assumed to prescribe by statute the causes of discipline and disbarment, as well as the procedure.

Of five suggested remedies, lying chiefly in the hands of the laymen through their control over legislatures, Thompson recommended, first, that the bar in every state should have the power of self-government, subject, of course, to review by the courts; that it should have the power "not only to refuse admission to applicants lacking in intellectual training and moral character, but also to scourge from its ranks the unscrupulous and unprofessional lawyer."

It is of interest in this connection that the Missouri Bar Association at its recent meeting adopted a resolution advocating making the bar of the state self-governing.

Another remedy would be a judicial council with official standing in each state, the function of which would be to watch over the administration of justice and recommend improvements in machinery and methods.

The courts, too, he said, should be self-governing; they should have restored to them "the power to prescribe rules of practice and procedure. Much of the delay of which the layman complains is to be attributed to the rigid, inflexible, and often archaic rules which have been prescribed by a legislature, perhaps years before, and which, were it not impossible, can be changed only by the tedious process of legislative enactment.

Contrast of British Methods. The expeditiousness of British justice is chiefly attributable to the fact that in Great Britain the rules of practice and procedure are formulated, not by Parliament, but by the Rules Committee, under the supervision of the judiciary. Give our judges the same power and congested dockets will disappear and the intolerable delays which now afflict us will be avoided.

Universal acceptance by the States of the educational standards set by the Bar Association would help, Thompson said. When the standards were adopted in 1921 only one state required two years of college training as a prerequisite to admission to the bar; today, he said, there were 19 which had a present or prospective requirement of two years of college work or its equivalent.

The fifth recommendation was that "The layman must do his part."

"Law Is Layman's Law." "The law is the layman's law and the courts are his courts," Thompson said. "He must do his part as a voter. . . . He must do his part as a juror. . . . The layman who evades jury service in time of peace is as much a slacker in the performance of his duty as the man who evades service of his country in time of war."

Turning to an indictment of the public for indifference to and neglect of the general welfare of the country, Thompson said:

"How is it with our country? To the thoughtful and observant it is not plainly evident that our institutions are beset today by dangers more ominous than have threatened us in the past? No foreign foe frightens our shores, but surely Kluks and Gophers and Vandals assail us from within. Successfully to cope with the problems of the morrow will require not only ability and understanding, but courage and self-sacrifice as well, and that too in unstinted measure.

Republic Still on Trial. "Republican institutions are still on trial. It is still the mission of America, with its far flung territory, its diversified interests, its heterogeneous population, and its menacing industrial and social problems, to demonstrate to the world and to posterity that a representative democracy such as our fathers conceived and founded, can survive.

"We want a government of, by and for the people; yet the people stifle and suppress the interest of their children in public affairs by encouraging them to avoid politics and to shun public service. A government of, by and for the people; yet there prevail among the people themselves ignorance of the Constitution and its fundamental philosophy, indifference in the discharge of the common and simplest duties of citizenship, and indifference to the consequences of their civic apostasy. A government in which every man and woman is a ruler crowned with the right of suffrage; yet less than one-half of the citizens of adult age vote at the general elections and less than one-fourth of them at the primaries. A government to encourage business; yet government bureaus are now in competition with more than 350 lines of business. A government to protect property; yet Federal government expenditures approximate $5,000,000,000 per annum, and $14,000,000,000—one-fifth of the nation's annual income—was wrung from the people last year to defray the expenses of governmental operations.

"Government to guard liberty, so that individual initiative should be promoted, individual enterprise rewarded and personal pride, self-respect and ambition to achieve should be developed; yet increasing millions of our countrymen are becoming dependent upon government taxes for their maintenance. A government to encourage self-reliance; yet one sees an ominous increasing disposition on the part of individuals and industries to look to the national government for support. A government intended to be the servant of the people; yet the people are rapidly becoming the slaves of government. A government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed; yet the governed are deriving their powers from the consent of the government.

"A government, the philosophy

Women said:

You Can't Use Fast-Working Soaps for Colored Things

BUT they hadn't tried the New Oxydol then!

Now there's a soap that soaks out dirt double quick and still is kind to hands, safe for colors and dainty things.

It's called Oxydol. Turn the hot water in your washtub; sprinkle in some Oxydol—then you'll know why this soap can do so much and still be safe. Quick as a flash, every particle of Oxydol has dissolved into thick, long-lasting suds—50% more suds.

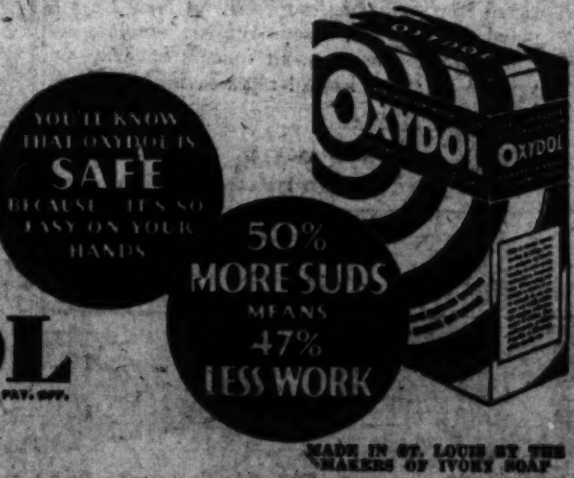

Those extra suds are the secret of easy washing, of cleaner, whiter clothes. Weak, watery suds that flake away are worse than wasteful—they let the dirt fall back on the clothes so you have to rub it out. But Oxydol's richer, thicker suds soak it out and keep it out so clothes are gleaming clean and fresh.

Use Oxydol in your washing machine. Use it for dishes. It won't ball up or leave a scum. And those richer, livelier suds cut grease like lightning—then rinse off quick so dishes are sparkling clean. Remember, too, that Oxydol makes thick, clean smelling suds in any water, and all water turns hard when you put in dirty clothes or dishes.

Ask your grocer today for one of the big bull's-eye packages that will save you so much time and money and work. You'll bless the day you learned its name.

DISCUSSES COMPLAINTS OF LEGAL PROFESSION
of whose founders was that it is the duty of the citizen to maintain the state; yet there is rapidly spreading the fatal philosophy that it is the duty of the state to maintain its citizens.

"This is we left naked to our enemies in the industrial revolution of the machine; thus do our governmental expenditures rival the mad prodigality of the Caesars; thus do the productive forces of the country drag the bail and chain of colossal tax burdens. If our government is to be killed, it is just here that the mortal thrust will be given. Here is the Achilles' heel of the Constitution. Against the impending, indeed, the menacing danger, what is our protection?"

LEADERSHIP THE NEED OF HOUR
The urgent eye, the imperative need in this crucial hour, therefore, is leadership. Leadership sufficiently self-sacrificing to go out among the people and review with them the problems of the present in the light of the lessons of the past; to the end that public opinion may be intelligently formed and wisely directed. Leadership that is sufficiently informed to know the Constitution and thoroughly to understand our theory of government and the machinery constructed for its operation; that is familiar with the forensic battles that have been fought over our Constitution and laws, with the relative spheres of the Federal and state governments and the importance of maintaining both in their full integrity; that prelates the danger of centralized power; is companion in spirit with the great men and noble women who have adorned our past; is saturated with our history and our traditions, with our national ideals and our national spirit; that loves our Constitution, reveres its founders, and abhors paternalism, socialism and communism as destructive of liberty and the genius of our free institutions.

Nearly all the 1700 delegates were present at the opening session in Constitution Hall. Replying to the address of welcome by Frank J. Hogan, president of the District of Columbia Bar Association, Frank E. Atwood, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Missouri said: "Sound leadership is essential to our national salvation. The people of the country should think less of their rights and more of their duties toward the Government."

REGULAR COMMUNITY FUND DRIVE IN EAST ST. LOUIS

The regular drive for funds to finance the agencies of the East St. Louis Community Fund will be made this year. It was decided yesterday at a meeting of a citizens' committee at East St. Louis.

The decision was made after discussion as to the advisability of the drive in view of the relief work now being carried on by the State with money borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Illinois State Legislature voted to spend $20,000,000 in relief work to be paid out of a bond issue to be submitted in November. Until last February, direct relief was carried on in East St. Louis with an emergency fund of $31,000 set aside from the Community Fund treasury, and a special gift of $25,000 to the Salvation Army.

Since February, when the State took over the work, allocations to St. Clair County for relief have averaged $87,000 a month. It was agreed at yesterday's meeting, that the Community Fund should attempt to raise a minimum of $40,000 to augment the State aid, and to assist in maintaining the character-building organizations which have received contributions in the past.

Coolidge's S

Former President Quote Cleveland Against Proposals

Declares "the Worst Is Prob Asserts President's Policies
Economic Recove

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—Former President Coolidge called for the selection of President Hoover in speech before a large crowd in Madison Square Garden last night.
He said: "If saving the country from one impending disaster after another provides any basis for attitude, President Hoover is entitled to gratitude."

Coolidge declared the country knows its worst troubles are probably past and economic recovery is beginning. Then he attacked Franklin D. Roosevelt with these words:
"An early and timely word from the Democratic candidate for president that he would reject the proposal to increase the national debt by $2,000,000,000 to pay the pensions would have been a great encouragement to business, reduced unemployment and guaranteed the integrity of the national credit.
While he remained silent economic recovery was immeasurably impaired."

Crowd Laughs and Shouts.
Making no attempt at forensics, the only living ex-President took his glasses and manuscript and read his speech. The crowd broke into laughter at his sallies and shouts "No, no" or "Yes, yes" to his questions.
In his slow, deliberate voice, he said at what he called "padding the Democratic Treasury raids" and said that assurance that "they could be defeated by a Republican majority in November" would have effect "in reviving all kinds of business." He said preservation of the protective tariff, sound money and President Hoover's measures to protect the country's credit system were safe, sure phases of a comprehensive program of economic rehabilitation in which no man had been forgotten.

Praises Hoover's Vision.
"Some people are saying," Coolidge also declared, "that as things will not be any worse, we might well try a change. That is a very dangerous principle to apply to the discharge of the duties of American citizenship. Things could be worse than they are and would have been much worse had not been for the vision, the courage and the leadership of President Hoover."

The Garden, which seats 22,000, was filled in its lower sections;
there were vacant seats in the upper seats.
The text of the speech follows:
My fellow countrymen: This meeting was arranged by a body of public-spirited New York people and the National Republican Committee, for the purpose of helping re-elect as President of the United States Herbert Hoover. I have accepted an invitation to address you in order that I might express my opinion on some of the issues of the campaign, reaffirm my support of the President and reas-sert my faith in the Republican party, the most efficient instrument for sound popular government ever entrusted with the guidance of a great nation.

We ought to bring to all our tasks a spirit of good cheer, but a national election which is to determine the destinies of more than 100,000,000 people for the next four years cannot be considered as anything less than a serious undertaking to be seriously approached and thoroughly discharged. After all, the government that is worth anything comes from duty well done, from meeting the obligations of the present as they occur.

"Things Could Be Worse."
Some people are saying that as things could not be any worse we might as well try a change. That is a very dangerous principle to apply to the discharge of the duties of American citizenship. Things are worse in other parts of the world than they are here and would have been much worse if it had not been for the vision, the courage and the leadership of President Hoover.
Before we decide that we want to have a change we ought to determine what the chances are of bringing any improvement. We will be most likely to find progress holding fast to that which experience has proved to be sound and just and true.

Casting a ballot to determine the shall be President of the United States ought to take on a judicial function. The ability, experience and character of the candidates, the policies with which he has identified himself in the past and the standing of his associates and advisers, and the results which have generally been secured under all to be carefully considered. No other attitude in approaching an election is worthy of a free people.

Coolidge's Speech Calling for Election of Hoover on Ground of Common Sense

Former President Quotes Cleveland Against Tariff Proposals of Roosevelt

Declares "the Worst Is Probably Past" and Asserts President's Policies Are Aiding Economic Recovery.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—Former President Coolidge called for the election of President Hoover in his first annual message to the Congress nearly 30 years ago. He was a wise statesman and so sound on most economic questions that his party deserted him and refused him re-election for nearly a quarter of a century. After declaring that he had withdrawn certain treaties from the Senate because they surrendered large revenues and raised embarrassing questions under the favored-nation clause of treaties, he said: "As a further objection it is evident that tariff reduction by treaty diminishes that independent control over its own revenues which is essential for the safety and welfare of any government. Emergency calling for an increase of taxation may at any time arise and no engagement with a foreign power should exist to hamper the action of the Government."

There has never been any adequate answer of the principle which that President declared, respectively on a wide scale is not practical. More than that, no attempt to apply it is certain to produce intense domestic jealousy and dissension. In order to get out duty lowered abroad we should have to lower another duty at home. The domestic producers who suffered from a lowering of our duties would have a good cause to feel that they had been sacrificed to secure an advantage to some other foreign and domestic producers.

There is no Democratic House. It is very easy to criticize after the event. Constructive leadership is not so easy. I have no taste for criticism, I much prefer to present the constructive and statesmanlike program of my party. But when it is constantly charged that President Hoover lacks leadership I hope I may be pardoned for a slight reference to what appears to be offered in its place. As early as November, 1928, the Democratic leader publicly urged the presentation of a constructive program by his party. In the campaign of 1930 another authoritative promise of a constructive program was issued. The Democratic leader again warned his party in November, 1931, to present a constructive program, yet when that party elected a speaker of the House and assumed control of that body no program had yet been presented.

The President in his message pointed out the necessity of increasing revenues and cutting down expenses. The acting chairman of the Ways and Means Committee reported a new tax bill which he said was non-partisan and had the unanimous support of 15 Democrats and 16 Republicans of the committee. What then happened is well known history. The Democratic members of the House deserted their leaders, destroyed the bill, and after their 230 only 40 supported it on the final vote.

In their efforts for economy, which the President had already recommended, a special committee was appointed which finally reported a bill reducing expenditures by $200,000,000 a year. When the Democratic House finally passed it they had again deserted their leaders and rejected all the proposed savings but about $40,000,000. No constructive program for the revival of industry and commercial and financial reform was presented by the Democratic party in the last session of Congress.

One Hoover's Program. But that is only a part of the record. Mainline President Hoover had proposed the formation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, strengthening the Federal Land Bank system, the amendment of the Federal Reserve laws to provide more adequate credit and safeguard the gold standard, the creation of the home loan discount board and all the other legislation passed by the last Congress for the general relief of the economic situation. Many times he had the assistance and support of individual Democrats which he has publicly acknowledged. With this record where does the country think it can most hopefully turn for leadership?

One of the greatest services which the Republican party has rendered has been the support of sound money. During the war President Lincoln was still to issue greenbacks. The necessity as to the value of our currency which is created was one of the causes of the panic of the early 70's. Finally the Republican party passed a law over Democratic opposition declaring that some years in advance the greenbacks would be paid in gold, but the value of our currency and the power of the Government to redeem the pledge remained in doubt and caused great confusion and depression. When at last the Republican party on these two vital points. These practical objections were stated by President Cleveland in his first annual message to the Congress nearly 30 years ago. Calvin Coolidge in Political Arena

INTERESTING close-up snapshot of the former President as he waited for the applause to subside before beginning his Hoover speech at Madison Square Garden, New York City, last night.

High Lights in Coolidge's Speech

By the Associated Press.
FOLLOWING are some paragraphs from former President Coolidge's campaign address here last night:

No Government has ever yet been devised that could make the people prosperous all the time. But a Government will consistently keep the people in distress.

The assurance that the pending Democratic raids on the Treasury will be defeated by a Republican victory in November would no doubt have the same effect in reviving all kinds of business as the defeat of the Democratic greenback craze and the free silver issue.

An early and timely word from the Democratic candidate for President that he would reject the proposal to increase the national debt by $2,000,000,000 to pay a bonus would have been a great encouragement to business.

These practical objections (to Roosevelt's tariff proposals) were stated by President Cleveland nearly 30 years ago in his first message to Congress. He was a wise statesman and so sound on most economic questions that his party deserted him and refused him re-election for nearly a quarter of a century. One of the subjects discussed in this campaign which it is very easy to misrepresent and misunderstand is the tariff.

I reiterate my support of the President and recommit my faith in the Republican party, the most efficient instrument for sound popular government ever entrusted with the guidance of a great nation.

In the course of our economic progress we have become a great organized democracy. It has been the theory of the Republican party that the welfare of the people could best be promoted by strengthening and enlarging that system.

The first thought for relief would probably be a debt and a loan but a little consideration would show that increasing their debts and destroying their independence would scarcely be considered a real service to people in distress.

The fundamental remedy is not some form of pauperism, but a return to self-respecting, self-supporting and independent existence.

If initiating proposals and securing their adoption constitutes leadership, President Hoover is a leader. If saving the country from one impending disaster after another provides any basis for gratitude, President Hoover is entitled to gratitude.

Secretary of the Treasury, John D. Rockefeller, collected a large supply of gold in the Treasury and redeemed all the greenbacks that were presented the uncertainty ended, and a business revival began. The credit of the nation was established.

Saving the Gold Standard. The next assault on our currency system was not made with paper but with silver. That situation brought on the panic of the early 90's. When it was settled, by the election of President McKinley, that the national credit would be maintained another era of prosperity began. The nation was saved.

We have recently gone through another period when the credit of the nation has been at stake. Our power to continue the gold standard was doubted and foreign credit

Here withdrew their deposits in gold. At the same time under Democratic leadership it was proposed to issue $2,000,000,000 in greenbacks to pay the veterans' bonus and other measures were proposed which would have brought bankruptcy to the national treasury, destroyed the market for Government bonds and forced the abandonment of the gold standard. Under the leadership of President Hoover this calamity was averted. The passage of these measures was finally averted and the loss of our gold was offset by emergency legislation.

"Worst Probably Past"

In June the financial integrity of our Government appeared to be permanently established. Congress finally adjourned and our gold began to come back. The decline in trade ceased and confidence began to return until at the present time the country knows that its worst economic troubles are probably past and economic recovery is beginning.

The defeat of the Democratic greenback craze and the free silver issue were both followed by periods of prosperity under Republican administrations. The assurance that the pending Democratic raids on the Treasury will be defeated by a Republican victory in November would no doubt have the same effect in reviving all kinds of business as the defeat of the Democratic greenback craze and the free silver issue.

An early and timely word from the Democratic candidate for President that he would reject the proposal to increase the national debt by $2,000,000,000 to pay a bonus would have been a great encouragement to business, reduced unemployment, and guaranteed the integrity of the national credit. While he remained silent economic recovery was measurably impeded.

G. O. P. and the Common People. One subject constantly recurs in our national political campaigns which it is difficult to discuss without apology. But it is put forward with so much boldness that it cannot be entirely ignored. The charge is made that the Republican party and its candidates do not show any solicitude for the general welfare of the common run of people but are interested only in promoting the interests of a few favored individuals and corporations of large possessions.

This charge is made against the party of Abraham Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt and Herbert Hoover. Lincoln and Roosevelt are both dead. No one has any personal authority to speak in their names. But the charge is made which they accomplished in their lives, based on sound and solid economic principles, remains as a sacred trust to the Republican party which it has never failed to strive to administer. If there was any subject that was anathema to both these men it was the demagogue and the purveyor of half truths and unsound theories.

In the course of our economic progress we have become a great organized industrial democracy. It has been the theory of the Republican party that the welfare of the people could best be promoted by strengthening and enlarging that system. We have sought to create a condition under which the ordinary man would have the best possible opportunity to find a market for whatever he had to sell, whether it be of products or labor. We have tried to create a condition in which the man of millions of wage earners in this country, the Republican party has never believed that they could be furnished outside permanent employment and could ever receive a reasonable profit from employing them. We have advocated strengthening the position of the employer in order that he might pay better wages to his employees, although the competitive capacity of the people and increase the market for the farm and factory. We have sought to increase the returns of agriculture in order that it might better supply our people with food and clothing and make for our industrial output.

Question of Method. All this is a question of method, of the adoption of a means to an end. Always the end has been to improve the well being of the ordinary run of people. If any outside examination is made by the program we have accomplished under this system in the last two generations, I do not think any one seriously concerned that it has not been a success. The scale of wages has constantly increased, the standard of living has constantly risen. We have had temporary recessions and readjustments have been necessary. We are passing through such a period at the present time, but we have always managed to find our way out of the thing you have to have control—just as the feudal barons controlled their slaves—what you get, where you sleep, how you live.

Applause grew so frequent that each and every Republican speaker against it, explained that he had to catch a train to Milwaukee, concluding a 14-day campaign tour for the United States, in which he made about 10 speeches in 14 days, including yesterday's address at a City Club luncheon and a Town Club dinner.

TOO MANY 'BIG MONKEYS' IN AMERICAN BUSINESS, SOCIALIST SAYS IN TALK HERE

Mayor Hoan of Milwaukee Offers Story of Animals and the Coconuts to Support Plea Against Capitalism.

The causes of the depression were reduced to the simple terms of monkeys and coconuts by Daniel W. Hoan, Socialist Mayor of Milwaukee, at a meeting of about 1500 persons last night at the Odson.

The analogy, as he drew it, with a wit and mimicry that convulsed his audience, began with 100 "four-legged monkeys" on an island. Coconuts were plentiful and easily obtained by personal effort. But a monkey which wanted to be a big monkey called the 99 monkeys together and said, "We've got to have a business. You come down here in the morning and there'll be jobs for all of you."

And, searching for a medium of exchange, he gathered up all the coconuts on the island. In the morning the 99 little monkeys went to work gathering coconuts. That evening he paid them off, one coconut for one coconut. But their greed, he said, was too much for them. They wanted to trade back.

The Final Transaction. "You'll have to pay me two shells," the big monkey replied. And when they protested he replied: "I'm not in business for my health. It's my business, isn't it?" And the little monkeys added and paid two shells for every coconut. But soon they had no shells left, and half the coconuts they had produced were still piled up.

"And the only thing wrong about that is that four-legged monkeys don't engage in such folly," said Hoan. "Only two-legged monkeys do that, in this shell game of ours where the big monkeys get all the shells."

"We have the air above the earth, and the monkeys under the earth, each doing his own thing to all of us. Certainly none of us can claim that he put them there. But the minerals are in the grip of monopolists. And why haven't they got the air monopolized? Only because they don't know how."

"Everytime you buy a pound of sugar or a bar of soap you pay a profit here, a profit there. The big monopolies, through private ownership of the thing you have to have, control—just as the feudal barons controlled their slaves—what you get, where you sleep, how you live."

Here in St. Louis

By H. H. NIEMEYER

ST. LOUIS, like the rest of the world, is hearing a lot these days about the Insull, Sam and Martin and Mrs. Sam. It has been a long time since any of the family played a part in local history and yet, once upon a time Mrs. Samuel Insull created quite a stir here. That was before she became Mrs. Insull, the Mrs. Insull, with most of the money in Chicago at her command. As a matter of fact she had not even heard of Sam Insull who was just then trying to get some sort of a hold in the business world in the Windy City. It was in 1924 that Gladys Wallis, a very lovely young woman with eyes the size of saucers and a decided flair for acting, came to St. Louis to play at the old Grand Opera House in "Panchon and Crick." A drama which had served the famous Lotta Crabtree well a good many years before. Little Miss Wallis, who had been plain Mary Bird before her beauty landed her upon the stage, arrived here with a reputation for possessing a temper which had kept her in hot water around the theaters of the country most of the time. She was such a lovely little thing, no baby-like in her manner, that newspaper men who had been tipped off in advance to watch out for battles around the Grand Opera House when she came, refused to believe the reports—and almost missed a story.

War of the Roses.

WE remember well seeing Miss Wallis out at the Fair Grounds race track one afternoon during her week's visit here. With her was her leading man, Frederick Paulding, and the pair made a fine looking team on the veranda of the Jockey Club house. If there was any storm brewing in the Wallis outburst the little star gave no outward sign. And yet, that very night, things happened which almost broke up her way. It is a story which is being told in the "Panchon and Crick." In Miss Wallis' company was a St. Louis girl who got considerable attention from the home town audiences. There were rumors around the theater that the star was jealous, but there were no outbreaks of temper, or temperamental, until the evening following the visit to the race track. Perhaps the angelic looking little Miss Wallis had lost money but, whatever the reason, the stage hands at the Grand Opera House noted that she was in a bad humor and kept out of her way. If a rose star went looking for trouble he could find it easily enough. A stage hand over in Cincinnati was reported to have put the great James J. Corbett in his place. A woman was another matter and the theater employees dodged contact with the lady. But at the end of the second act, when Miss Wallis, with her company, was on the stage around her, took a curtain call, and then came down the aisle and handed a bunch of roses over the footlights. Mr. Paulding stepped forward, took them and put them in the star's arms. The curtain came down and went up again just in time for the audience to see the future Mrs. Insull throw the roses in the face of the St. Louis actress. The bouquet was meant for the latter in the first place, but Miss Wallis did not catch a glimpse of the name on the card until after she had taken the offering to her own bosom.

Maddy Waters. A LOT of people go abroad every year and marvel at the sight at Lyons, in France, where the Seine and Rhone rivers join or their death to the Mediterranean. A good many others journey on to Germany for a trip down the Rhine and are thrilled at Koblenz. It is there that the Moselle and the Rhine unite. There are plenty of St. Louisans who could tell you all about those European rivers and yet very few of them ever took a good look at the spot where the two rivers stream in America—the Missouri and the Mississippi—meet. Just 12 miles from Broadway and Olive the mighty rivers join forces, but the spot is so inaccessible that a round trip is necessary if a person, starting out from St. Louis, wishes to take a look at some near home scenery. It might be thought that the city would have a broad highway to the spot and, maybe, a park there. There is no roadway and no garden spot. Perhaps it might be a different story if there was any scenery at the end of the 12 miles, but grandeur, surprisingly, is lacking. In the mouth of the Missouri there is a square island of possibly 300 acres, which has grown upon a sandbar in the last 10 or 15 years. Between it and the St. Louis County shore is a slough, now fairly well filled with water. The island, which bears no name, is a thicket of tall willows. Upstream, to the west, there is a glimpse of the channel; to the east, an even stinger glimpse of the Mississippi.

And Poor Roads. THE junction cannot be seen from St. Louis County. The long, low stretch of St. Charles County land between the two rivers, known as Missouri Point, comes close to the confluence, seven miles of Missouri Highway No. 99, but there are no roads, only a labyrinth of willows and mud. The Illinois bank may be reached by dirt roads, not shown on the maps, southwest of Hartford. The mouth of the Missouri has the habit of shifting about. Some-

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES

ARRIVING yesterday was Miss Elizabeth Carey of Cheyenne, Wyo. She is the guest of Miss Eleanor Conant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Kimball Conant, 19 Portland place. Miss Carey had just been at Alken, N. C., where she entered her younger sister, Louise, in the Permitta School. She has visited Miss Conant on other occasions and has been much entertained. She is the daughter of Charles Carey of Cheyenne, and the niece of United States Senator Robert Davis Carey.

A buffet luncheon was given today by Mrs. Frederick Humphrey Mackay, 3659 Lindell boulevard, in honor of her home, 79 Arundel place, complimenting Miss Suzanne Mackay, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Castleman Mackay, 3659 Lindell boulevard. The rooms were decorated with flowers from the garden of the country home of Mrs. Anne C. F. Belcher, Mrs. Semple's mother. Mrs. J. Corbett in his place. A woman was another matter and the theater employees dodged contact with the lady. But at the end of the second act, when Miss Wallis, with her company, was on the stage around her, took a curtain call, and then came down the aisle and handed a bunch of roses over the footlights. Mr. Paulding stepped forward, took them and put them in the star's arms. The curtain came down and went up again just in time for the audience to see the future Mrs. Insull throw the roses in the face of the St. Louis actress. The bouquet was meant for the latter in the first place, but Miss Wallis did not catch a glimpse of the name on the card until after she had taken the offering to her own bosom.

Announcement was made today of the engagement of Mrs. Virginia Douglasmae Cosby of the Park Plaza Hotel, to Mr. Frederick Russell Bigelow of St. Paul, Minn. The wedding will take place in St. Louis this winter. Mrs. Cosby, a native of St. Louis, is the daughter of the late H. Louis Douglasmae and her parents, Geo. and Mrs. Samuel Davis Sturgis, were prominent in the earlier days of St. Louis social history. Mrs. Cosby's daughter, Miss Virginia Cosby of New York, was presented to society here two years ago. She is now known by her stage name, Ilya Zorn.

Mrs. Cosby attended Mary Institute and following the death of her father, moved with her family to New York, where she was graduated from the Manhattanville College of the Sacred Heart, and from Miss Ely's School, Greenwich, Conn. She met her debut in St. Paul and returned to New York where she was married. About 17 years ago she became interested in interior decoration, which profession she followed until recently. Her sisters are Mrs. E. B. Young of St. Paul and Mrs. Samuel Skidmore of New York. She is related to the Pillsbury family, which is well known in St. Paul and Minneapolis. Mrs. Bigelow is a graduate of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., and is a member of the University Club of New York, and the Minnesota, Somerset, Town and County, Minkabada and White Bear Yacht Clubs of St. Paul. For 20 years he has been president of the St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Co., succeeding his father, who served in the same capacity for an equal length of time. He has two daughters, Mrs. Henry Ingram of day it may swallow the island.

In 1766, two years after the French founded St. Louis the Spanish sent an expedition to build two forts, the outlet to the Missouri. Capt. Francisco Ruiz Morales soon found that Missouri Point was no place for a couple of forts, so he built just one, on what is now the St. Louis County side. It was 80 feet square and had five cannons. No trace of the fort remains and doubtless the Missouri washed it away, after it was abandoned in 1781. Out in the Mississippi, where the tributary pours in, there is a line of demarcation between the muddy water of the Missouri and the not-quite-so-muddy blue of the Mississippi. But, aside from that, there is nothing very much to see and the joining of the great rivers, close to home, will never threaten the beauty of the European rivals.

ROLLINS ELECTED HEAD OF EDUCATION BOARD

Mrs. Kroeger, Voting Against Him, Says She Lacks Confidence in His Ability.

Carrying out the decision of an informal meeting last week, the board of education has tonight elected Myrt A. Rollins as its president. Dr. David C. Todd vice-president, and Emmet T. Carter acting attorney.

Although the board usually acts unanimously at its formal meetings, Rollins received only eight votes out of the membership of 12 last night. He and Howard G. Cook were excused from voting. Mrs. E. H. Kroeger and Mrs. E. H. Michael voted against him. Rollins, a lawyer, was the only candidate nominated. The two women members had favored election of Cook in last week's conference.

"I lack confidence in Mr. Rollins' ability to fill the position," Mrs. Kroeger told the board and audience. "It is not an honorary position, but requires leadership. Since Mr. Rollins is to be elected, I wish to offer him my strong support."

Mrs. Michael Pledges Support. Mrs. Michael and Cook also pledged support to Rollins. Dr. Todd was elected unanimously except that he refrained from voting. He also had been a candidate for president. Carter, who has been assistant attorney at $3500 a year, was chosen unanimously as acting attorney for an indefinite term at $1000 a year. He succeeds the late Robert Burkhart.

A bronze plaque in appreciation of his services was presented to Richard Murphy, retiring president, by his colleagues. Murphy, whose term was devoted to financial re-arrangement, said the schools had a cash balance of $260,000 larger now than 3 years ago. He praised Superintendent of Instruction Gerling, the teaching corps and other employees. Letters from the St. Louis Club of Women Principals Association, praising Murphy, were read. C. L. Miller, president of the Public School Patrons' Alliance, a position Rollins once held, and four other former presidents, were at the meeting to express confidence in Rollins.

Takes Over Lunch Service. The board accepted the offer of the Children's Lunch Association to turn over its work of providing cheap, wholesome lunches for pupils at five schools to the board. The association gave the board its equipment at the Ashland, Bow, Lowell, Webster and Lincoln schools, and its treasury of more than $1000, to be used in providing free food, in a letter from Miss Bells L. Tamm, president. Gerling said the cost of taking over the activity would be small.

The board adopted a resolution by Mrs. Kroeger in appreciation of the organization's services. It was decided to refund $217.50 paid by various organizations for use of school buildings at night, as the rule requiring payment, adopted last July, was rescinded last month.

No action was taken on a pending proposal to establish the position of Director of Public Relations and Publicity, to aid the superintendent.

After spending the summer in Annapolis, Md., where their family had a cottage for the summer, Miss Elizabeth and Miss Isabelle Robert, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas W. Robert, 3249 Washington boulevard, returned home Sunday. En route home they took a motor trip through the East and spent some time in Washington. Mrs. Robert preceded them home.

The Charitable Group, an organization of 16 women, most of them living in St. Louis County, will give a card party next Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Meadow Brook Country Club. Proceeds will be used to help needy families which have come under the group's observation. Quits made by members during the summer will be sold.

The Charitable Group was formed last spring. With Mrs. Wallace F. Baker as chairman, it has been meeting at frequent intervals since.

Mrs. Peter M. Kling, Detroit, formerly of St. Louis, arrived here Saturday night for a visit with her sisters, Mrs. Ida R. C. Hoppe, 5751 Lotus avenue, and Mrs. Anna Jacquot. The late Mr. Kling was associated for many years with the St. Louis Car Co.

FINDS OLDER FATHERS' CHILDREN ARE BRIGHTER

Englishman Says Chances Are Much Greater to Inherit Rich Mental Talents.

By the Associated Press. NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—A child of a father more than 70 has 50 times better chances of inheriting rich mental talents than one whose father was under 45.

To prove this a study of 1000 persons of outstanding capability in the fourteenth edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica is published by A. F. Dutton of Hertsfordshire, England in the British official scientific journal Nature.

The same tables showed children of fathers of more than 45 have twice the chances of inheriting capability. The chances are ten-fold with paternal age of more than 60.

The Lomax Hypothesis. These studies tend to revive a warning scientific faith in a method for human beings to improve themselves from generation to generation. The method is the famous Lomax hypothesis, a corollary of evolution, which holds that in the process of natural selection acquired capabilities can be transmitted to offspring.

In other words, a person who works hard enough to become a better man, can somehow transmit some of this acquired character to his children. Not so has been the recent preponderance of scientific experiments aimed at discovering whether Lomax was right.

Thus in laboratory scientists have cut off a certain leg of a few order of animal generation after generation, but never it is said has this lack of leg resulted in young that inherited the "acquired" leglessness of their elders.

Eminent Men as Examples. Dutton says that his attention was attracted to the possibilities that inheritance of acquired talent might become evident in children of aged fathers by the "noteworthy" numbers of eminent men begotten by "fathers of ripe age."

The father of Francis Bacon, he says, was 52; of John Herschel 54; of Robert Boyle 61; of William Pitt 51; of Samuel Johnson 53; of John Hunter 65 and of James Parsons 54.

ESCAPE OF CONVICTS BALKED
Two Kansas Inmates Escaped
Two Men, Are Caught.
By the Associated Press.
LANSING, Kan., Oct. 12.—An attempted escape of two prisoners from the Kansas State penitentiary was frustrated here last night.
Warden Kirk Prather said the prisoners apparently fashioned a key with which to let themselves out of their cells. The men, Robert Ragland and Ollie Long, both serving long terms for robbery, then climbed J. P. McNamee, a guard, and R. C. Weaver, a convict orderly. An alarm was given and the warden with officers and guards surrounded the two convicts and overpowered them.

No true bills were returned by the grand jury yesterday in its investigation of a lotto game at the
A. B. C. Hall, 3540A Easton avenue. Arthur Pennock, 2817 North Vandeventer avenue, and his wife, Elsie, named by police as proprietors of the game, and Frank Doerer, 5544 Goethe, a venue, owner of the hall, were absolved.
The raid was part of a campaign
by police and Circuit Attorney Miller against gambling in lotto games. Part of the evidence were cardboard tabs used to cover numbers in the lotto game, on which were printed "Wienbrenner for Circuit Attorney." J. Ray Wien-

WOMAN AND MOTHER
ARE BEATEN TO DEATH

Two Children of Former Also Attacked at Home in Connellsville, Pa.

By the Associated Press.
CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Oct. 12.—
The bodies of Mrs. Nellie Treas-ler, 28 years old, and her mother, Mrs. Amanda Harden, 82, were found at the Treasler home today.
They had been beaten to death with a heavy club or piece of iron. Both were widows.
Two Treasler children, Sadie, 11, and Billy, 5, were slugged into unconsciousness. They were taken to Connellsville State Hospital, where Sadie is in serious condition.
Billy revived several hours after he was found and told police: "My mother did it. She hit Sadie first and then me. She hit us with a piece of iron."
However, police discredited the boy's statement. Mrs. Treasler's head was beaten out of shape and investigators said it would have been impossible for her to inflict the injuries on herself. They are searching for a man, whose identity they did not disclose, who had been attentive to Mrs. Treasler.
The younger woman's body, clad only in underclothing, was found in the back yard. Mrs. Harden was dead on a bed. Beside her was Billy, with deep gashes in his head.
Sadie was found unconscious in the living room. Police said she apparently had been felled while trying to escape from the slayer.
The house was in disorder and police said there apparently had been a terrific struggle.
Detectives failed to find the death weapon.
The police said evidence indicated Mrs. Treasler's body had been dragged across two rooms and thrown out of a kitchen window into the back yard. Then, they said, it had been dragged several feet. The killing was discovered by a neighbor boy. Police had to break into the house, as all doors were locked.

The family was destitute.

To Enforce One-Hour Parking Rule Six mounted policemen have been put on duty on Chestnut street between Broadway and Twelfth boulevard and on Tenth and Eleventh streets from Market street to Washington avenue to keep motorists from parking there more than the hour permitted under city ordinances between 7:30 a. m. and 4:30 p. m. The mounted officers have been used recently to keep traffic clear near commission houses on streets east of Broadway.

Mrs. Constance Smith Tells of Suicide of George Davidson in Apartment.

By the Associated Press.
LOS ANGELES, Oct. 12.—An inquest will be held Friday into the death of George Davidson, 32-year-old director of screen tests for Fox Film Studio, found shot to death yesterday in his apartment, apparently a suicide. Deputy sheriffs expressed belief that a tangle of love and finances impelled Davidson to kill himself.
They said letters and notes he had written indicated his mind was affected by worry over debts and an infatuation for Mrs. Constance Smith, wife of Jack Smith of Dallas, Tex. Mrs. Smith, mother of four children, was erroneously reported yesterday as having been divorced.
She died from his apartment yesterday morning after witnessing the shooting, telling officers Davidson threatened to kill himself unless she married him. She said she went to the apartment at 7 a. m.
to try to pacify Davidson after he had threatened to come, to the home of her parents and shoot her.
Deputy Sheriff said Mrs. Smith told him she met Davidson when she arrived here from Dallas about two months ago, that he told her she should be in pictures and helped her, and finally avowed his love and tried to marry her.
Mrs. Smith denied Davidson owed her $1000 as was indicated, officers said, in a letter he wrote his mother, Mrs. G. A. Davidson,
New York City.
Davidson, a former resident of Wichita, Kan., had been divorced from Thelma Roberts, former actress, now of Oakland, who recently attached his salary in an alimony action.

Mars Joes said he expected Babe Ruth to continue to be a big factor in the Yankees offense, pointing out that to the surprise of many there had been talk of the Bambino being "through" for the past 10 years. He praised the young Yankee pitchers, but remarked that Herb Pennock's relief work was one of the big features of the world series. As to the outstanding play of the Championship, McCarthy considered Chapman's catch of Hoff Herman in the first game outstanding, but he also praised the work of Shortstop Frankie Crosetti in the final game at Chicago.

Mrs. Mary E. Haney Dies at 83.
By the Associated Press.
LAGRANGE, Mo., Oct. 12.—Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Haney died here last night at the age of 83 years. Her first husband, John Y. Moore, was one of 10 Confederate soldiers executed at Palmyra, Mo., Oct. 14, 1862, by Union soldiers.

She craves success for her husband—happiness in her home—and health for her family.

And a wise woman knows how much all three of these desires depend on herself for fulfillment. It's up to her to keep her husband out of debt; to run her home efficiently and economically; and to serve healthful, appetizing meals.

Though all this is a big contract for the home executive, millions of women have successfully fulfilled every one of its terms by availing themselves of A & P's help.

From A & P they get the best food money can buy at prices that help to balance the family budget; and at the end of the month, they have no nagging meat and grocery bills to pay. In fact, ambitious women all over America have found A & P a useful ally.

Isn't Their Protection Worth 10c a Month?

No man who loves his wife and family would willingly neglect to provide for their protection. But all too often the possibility of anything happening to him seems so remote that he postpones action until it is too late.

Especially important in this age of speed is travel and pedestrian accident protection. You take a chance every time you travel... drive a car... or cross a street.

If you are not protected against the hazards of present-day travel, you owe it to your family to obtain the broad protection offered to subscribers of the Post-Dispatch. For 10 cents a month you obtain a policy paying substantial indemnities for loss of life, limb or time in specified travel and pedestrian accidents.

Now is the time to get this low-cost protection—before an accident occurs.

REAL ISSUES IGNORED SAYS DAVID LAWRENCE

Calls Campaign a Reflection on Intelligence of American People.

The present campaign was declared to be "a reflection on the intelligence of the American people," by David Lawrence, editor of the United States Daily and radio speaker, in his luncheon talk at the League of Women Voters at the Kingsway Hotel yesterday.

Campaign methods of both parties, Lawrence said, "presuppose that the people do not know the records of the parties and candidates. It assumes that they will vote on emotions and prejudices, and will punish one party and reward another, when we know that no party can change our economic fortunes, and that neither controls our economic welfare."

"Events overseas have affected our fortunes," the speaker continued, "it is to talk of political parties rescuing us. The most either party can do is to lead the people forward."

Lawrence outlined other actual issues, the full discussion of which would be of value—the tariff, fiscal policy, taxation—whether on a broad or a narrow base—and governmental economy, whether to be attained by eliminating extravagance or at the expense of essential services. These he held to be more pertinent questions than "whether one party is bad or the other good." He held the two candidates to be honest men, under either of whom the country would be safe.

Another important question, as to the next President's policy, Lawrence said, was the attitude which he would take toward organized minorities, and the expenditures which organized minorities have forced upon the Government. Lawrence developed this subject in more detail than his other topics.

"The President's veto power," Lawrence said, "is the only trifling, one restraining organized minority groups promoting sectional or individual interests, and acting in a spirit of narrow provincialism. How will that veto power be wielded by the next President? It is as valuable to know what the candidates oppose as to know what they support. The bonus groups have been strong enough to pass most of their measures over presidential vetoes. The National Economy League, opposing the bonus and other special expenditures, is using a similar plan."

"Organized minorities" can be thwarted, in the last analysis, only by an active and intelligent electorate, and the place to deal with them is in the congressional districts. That is where they gain their power, for the bulk of the national districts are organized groups of 10 per cent or less of the voters can turn the election one way or the other. This sort of thing is the forerunner of a Congress. It is a question whether a new President, or the old one, can preserve party cohesion in Congress."

Lawrence predicted that the problems of economic recovery would be more serious than the problems encountered thus far. "How to absorb 10,000,000 unemployed will be a staggering problem," he said, "and to restore the flow of goods and capital between this and other countries is another problem. The State of Pennsylvania alone had $112,000,000 export trade in 1928 that it did not have in 1931, and if it had that back, it would not need to be begging relief money."

"I believe it will take us, three, five, seven years more to reach an equilibrium," Lawrence said in answer to a question. "There will be readjustment, but it is futile to expect some wonderful change, when we are a part of a world-wide condition."

Lawrence's talk was a feature of an all-day school for voters, conducted by the League of Women Voters, in which other speakers were Prof. Frank J. Brune of Washington University, Mrs. Virgil Leeb, Miss Emma Bobb, Election Board chairman, and Abraham Epstein of the National Committee for Old Age Security.

Ex-Member of Foreign Relations Committee, Publisher of Michigan Newspaper.

By the Associated Press.
GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Oct. 12.—Former United States Senator William Alden Smith died at his home here yesterday afternoon. He was 73 years old.

He had been active in the present campaign in his home city until last Saturday, when he suffered a heart attack.

Smith was elected to Congress in 1894 in the Fifth Michigan District that previously had been Democratic. He was re-elected at times. He was a member of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee that drafted the declaration of war against Spain. He also served on the Ways and Means Committee.

In 1907, the Michigan Legislature elected him to the United States Senate. Smith's familiarity with international affairs won for him a place on the Foreign Relations Committee.

Largely on Smith's insistence a chairman of the Committee on Territories, admission of Arizona and New Mexico to the Union was accomplished despite a presidential veto.

In 1916 Senator Smith entered the Republican presidential preference primary in Michigan, being opposed by Henry Ford. Ford won the primary contest by 5186 votes.

PASSING OF THE OLD MARKET STREET

BEHIND THE SCREENS

By ROBBIN COONS

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 11.—FAIR-SIZED section of studio ground now is being transformed into English soil—a portion of dear old London, to be exact—with homes, stores and public park, and a reproduction of Trafalgar Square, monument and all.

It is on tremendous scale, and will be used in the filming of the much anticipated "Cavalcade," on which expense is not being spared. However, not all the cost of the set, which is considerable even though constructed with much front and no back in the Hollywood tradition, will come out of the petty million dollars set aside for the production.

SETS like this have multiple lives, because other studios requiring London backgrounds will be glad to pay for their use, and each rental is credited against the original cost, which thus is divided among many productions. In time, because London will always be London, the set will pay for itself—just as the big ocean liner on the same lot has returned its cost and more, enough more to construct a newer, faster successor.

That transplanted section of New York equally justifies itself. You've seen it countless times.

The all-English cast they've collected for this "Cavalcade," by the way, will be entirely unknown to American audiences.

Clive Brook, of course, has been in Hollywood so long he is one of the town's best known players.

Diana Wynyard, who has her big chance in this, will have been seen in "Rasputin" before "Cavalcade" is completed, and already she has played in New York and on tour in "The Devil Passes."

Herbert Mundin has had bits and parts in several Fox pictures already, the latest, "Sherlock Holmes," and is quite the old-timer now. Irene Brown probably will not be remembered for it, but she had a small role with Jeanne Eagles in "The Letter," and Beryl Mercer—who doesn't remember her work with Gary Cooper in "Seven Days Leave," and other films? John Warburton has appeared in several talkies here, and Margaret Lindsay was introduced in "The Sign of the Cross."

Tempe Pigott has been here several years, while Billy Bevan dates his Hollywood career back to slapstick days of old.

It has been nearly two decades since "The Birth of a Nation" was filmed, but I suppose Henry B. Walthall always will be remembered as its "Little Colonel."

Despite the years there still is something of that tenderly remembered figure, who suffered with Lillian Gish through the vicissitudes of Civil War, in this aging character actor who has survived many changes in screen styles.

He came to pictures from the stage in 1916, when stage actors used the films for the time being, money and kept as far away from the camera as possible. He came to pictures from the stage in 1916, when stage actors used the films for the time being, money and kept as far away from the camera as possible.

"I had wandered down to the movie studios one day looking for an actor friend," he recalls, "and while waiting I can across D. W. Griffith. He talked some to me of pictures, and his enthusiasm was catching. When he asked me if I'd like to try working in a film, I told him I would."

Thus simply, without elaborate contracts, negotiations, mutual concessions, was a passport to fame issued in those days.

Times have changed much; Walthall has seen many things happen to the screen and its people; he doesn't believe the screen is in danger of perishing.

"Pictures have gone through these revolutions before," he smiles. "They'll probably go through them again. But we'll always have pictures. They're better now, in fact, than they ever were before. Better stories, better actors, too." The smile becomes broader. "Nobody knows that better than some of us old-timers," he adds.

Imagine an elongated, winnowed, in a sleek fur coat, tripping along on tooth-pick legs, and you have Lupa Vele's pride and joy—her faithful Chinuhua. How it escapes destruction, slipping and her heels all the time, is one of the wonders of Hollywood.

Always place your dress on a hanger upon removal and much time will be saved from needless pressing.

The TREND of the MODE for FALL BRIDGE

A ST. LOUIS SOCIETY GIRL DESCRIBES HER FAVORITE FROCK

MISS PEGGIE PIRRUNG, the writer of the following article, is the daughter of Mrs. ONYON W. Gaylord, 816 Hanley road. She attended a private school in Washington, D. C., and Villa Duchesne in St. Louis County, and spent the following year abroad. She made her debut last Christmas night at an elaborate dinner dance given by Col. and Mrs. Gaylord at the Bellevue Country Club.

-BY-

Peggiz Pirrung—

I used to be the saying that clothes make the man, but now in this age of chic, the tables seem to have been turned, and fashion seems to be saying, "Clothes make the woman!" It is no longer necessary for women to be expensively dressed, as long as they are smartly dressed, and the one type of frock that seems to be demanding the constant attention is the "in-between-time" dress.

This is the all around, ever necessary piece of the woman's wardrobe, which must be smart, intelligently selected and ready for use at a moment's notice. It is the dress that goes to formal luncheons, to the movies, to informal afternoon teas, and last but not far from least, goes out accompanied by a slick little hat and matching accessories, to dance the evening away.

This season, to be chic, the "in-between-time" frock should have the new high neck line... trying, we must admit... but often modified with a flattering soft collar, such as the one pictured. The waist of the dress should be high and closely fitted, and the length, always important, must be longer than that of sports wear and shorter than that of the afternoon or "cinema" frock. But one should not forget the intriguing new sleeves—smart, no, interesting, and so amusing that they fit in beautifully with the puffed and padded broad shoulder effects still smarter this year than last.

Color? Material? Yes, these are the criterions of this fall's smart gowns. But you can't help loving all the new crinkly crepes, the sleek cre de satin which trim so many things, and the dull, rich bagheers, or uncut velvet, which has made such a grand name for itself among the annals of fashion this fall. When you see these materials made into adorable little Parisian looking frocks in tones of burgundy, deep sea green, and that glorious lipstick red, and new shades of brown trimmed in contrasting colors and materials; you see them made into chic, important looking dresses with just a bit of smart frim, you wonder that there could ever be many new ideas, new colors, new contrasts and new opportunities.

Herbert Mundin has had bits and parts in several Fox pictures already, the latest, "Sherlock Holmes," and is quite the old-timer now. OPENING THE BIDDING. I wish to discuss in this article the weakest hand with which I advise opening the bidding in a suit, in First or Second position. Opening Primary Trick Requirement of Defensive Hands.

With the defensive type of hand, I look for three primary tricks, subject to reservations.

(a) With a suit containing five or more cards, three Primary tricks justifies a bid.

Example.

♠ A K x x x ♠ x x x ♣ x x x ♣ x x x

(b) With a four-card suit I require in addition some secondary values, such as a Queen Jack together or separately. I regard the Q J as a form of rebid value, providing additional safety.

Example.

♠ A x x ♠ A K x x ♣ x x x ♣ x x x

With the above hand I would bid 1 Diamond. If my partner takes out with 1 No Trump, a weak deal bid according to our system. I pass, being unable to rebid my suit. I feel that he will be reasonably safe in that contract, thanks to these "protective intermediates."

Holding the following hand:

♠ x x x ♠ A K x x ♣ x x x ♣ x x x

I prefer to pass. I do this for several reasons.

1. I feel that there is no future in this hand with our side as declarer unless my partner can take action independently of mine, either by opening the bidding or by overcalling an opposing bid. In either case I have unsuspected strength in the form of primary trick values, sufficient to take a safe part in the bidding from that point on.

2. From the other point of view, if I pass, my opponents may open the bidding and ultimately bid high, perhaps because each of them attributes to his partner one or more of my high cards.

We now come to the borderline hands which are not definitely aggressive or defensive in type. With these hands the primary trick requirements may be shaded when their aggressive qualities predominate, especially when promising developments in the Major suits.

Example 1.

♠ K Q 10 x ♠ x x x ♣ x x x ♣ A Q x x

With this hand I would pass; but (1) If the Heart suit were headed by the Jack, I would bid 1 Spade. The additional Jack, though unimportant in itself, would provide very strong support for a Heart take-out by my partner.

(2) If the Club Jack accompanied the A Q, I would bid 1 Spade. The strength of Club holding makes the hand look hopeful for game in No Trumps if my partner's take-out is in Diamonds. If he bids Hearts, I can give him a raise; if he can rebid, the Club holding should now give him a play for his game contract, by virtue of a finesse or discard.

Example 2.

♠ K Q 10 x ♠ x x x ♣ A Q x x ♣ x x x

With this hand I would pass; but (1) If the Spade and Club holdings were exchanged I would bid 1 Spade. A game may easily be developed if the partner holds normal spade support and a little outside strength, though not enough to open the bidding if I pass.

(2) If I had four little Hearts and no Diamonds, I would bid 1 Club. A response of Hearts or Spades by my partner would be gladly supported up to a game contract.

Borderline hands with high cards in three suits are the No Trump type and will be discussed in future articles.

SO many things are heading backward in a fashion way that it is getting hard to tell what's coming and what's going any more. Backs look like fronts and fronts look like backs. Blouses are buttoning themselves up the back, while skirts are buttoning themselves up the front. One hat felt ears pointed forward, while the neighbor has its ears pointed backward. A cape that ties in the front today may tie in the back tomorrow.

College girls are said to be raving and tearing their well-coiffured tresses over a new outfit which fills so many requirements. There's a short jacketed suit of suede-finished woolen to wear when grades are at stake. And for helping the team evade creditors there's a swaggy, gaudy wool with black fur, or bronze green wool with brown fur, and two smart color all-ances. The entire outfit—parents take note—will fit into a month's clothes allowance.

Jersey blouses have a way of sneaking into a wardrobe as soon as a cold wind comes whistling around the corner. Beige shades are here in greatest numbers, but the tangerine tones and a lemon yellow which bears much watching contribute a gay note. One of these jerseys buttons straight up the front to a very high neck in true Victorian manner. Another successfully achieves the new dropped shoulder line.

Convertible models do not as ways apply to motor cars as the wisely dressed woman can tell you. A convertible suit with long blouse before it combines brown broadcloth with a matching shade of crepe satin. The jacket and the high-waisted skirt are of this revived wool material. Satin fashions the short-sleeved blouse which is attached to the skirt.

Why not take a few hours off any evening now and learn some conjuring tricks with ribbon? With a few simple twists and turns and a few yards of ribbon, last year's dance frock can be transformed into a synthetic Paris creation. Try gossamer ruffles at the shoulders and hemline of an old velvet gown; taffeta ribbon puffings at shoulder and hemline of an old chiffon; velvet ruche and wide velvet sash to give the high neck, high waist, look to an old flat crepe. Starched lace has its merits too, as you'll soon discover when you begin to practice magic on your last winter's clothes.

If you're looking for a very special hat for a very special occasion there's a little ribbed velvet, one-sided turban which is a perfect drape. The shade is the new zinnia purple. The crown is cut away at one side to reveal the hair and just below this "ventilator" section nestles a row of zinnia pink velvet ribbon rosettes, fast against the hat. There's a veil, too, if you can believe it, of the same purple shade, a diaphanous pink velvet that posed dramatically at either side of the front.

IF YOU ASK MY OPINION

By MARTHA CARR

Dear Mrs. Carr: PLEASE give me your excellent advice on two problems. 1. A short time ago, while visiting the home of a friend in this town, I accidentally broke a large bay window. I apologized for this, but now I am wondering if I should offer to pay the expense of having the window replaced. What is your opinion?

2. A cousin from another city visiting our home stole a billfold containing $2 in money and some pictures and private papers. Should we write to him about this, and if not, how should we treat him? We should hate to cause his elderly mother worry because she has always been very nice to us. E. M. R.

It is customary to offer to replace anything you may destroy in another person's house. They may or may not accept it, but you should make the offer.

2. It would be best to ignore the theft, because of the elderly mother. This deplorable question comes up sometimes in an awkward way and must be handled with gloves. It is a serious thing to accuse anyone of theft, unless you have absolute proof, or possibly find the property in that person's possession. You will have to protect yourself for the future, however, by limiting yourself to the most courteous manner and by disconcerting special invitations. But, more especially, by locking and putting away things that may tempt him.

My Dear Mrs. Carr: VARIETY of problems are brought to you for adjustment. I wonder if this will engage your interest sufficiently to comfort a woman alone, old. This soul sits in darkness and the shadow of death, without one bright distraction for her gray days or long hours of life's wreckage will survive her passionate love for understanding of music.

Since the advent of the radio, there must be some who have photographs, one of which they would give to this lady. You prove the successful means to the end of this appeal.

Dear Mrs. Carr:

AM one of your daily readers, 22 years old, and don't know very much that is going on in the outside world as I have been sick most of the time since I was 12. I don't go out very much and I don't go out very much with girls or boys. Most of my friends I graduated with are married and cannot come to see me like they did before. I have gone with several boys, but when they find I can't go very far they stop making dates. I don't like to stay home all the time and watch others going out to have fine times. I hope you can find someone who will write to me and come to see me. I have had several jobs, but most of them were menial jobs, and then have to go to bed for three weeks. I never give up hopes, though.

There are so many things you could do at home and I am sure you will find some organization you might enjoy, one where your acquaintance and interest will bring people to see you. Your acquaintance with boys must, of course, be a hobby. Some of these girls who read this might like to write you, so send me your address.

Dear Mrs. Carr: AFTER telling a rich and industrious aunt I love to dance, she sent me, from another city, a pastel pink chalky crepe with little blue sleeves, trimmed with ostrich.

I'm wondering if it is considered a late summer dress, or will it be proper to wear to a dance. I usually go in simple afternoon dress and it seems rather too dressy, although it is an adorable dress. I have not, on account of illness, been to a dance lately, so I do not know just what is what.

DANCER. If the neck is not cut too low in which case you could contrive some sort of little sleeveless jacket, it would be lovely to dance in. If it is cut quite low, especially in the back, it would do only for formal. Look at the frocks down and you will know the kind of little jacket I mean, made perhaps of the same material if you can match it, or contrasting material like velvet, satin or thin crepe.

Dear Mrs. Carr: THERE is a company in Jefferson City that makes statuettes. Would you please give me the address of this company that makes these?

Be Extraordinary!

THERE is a worse obliteration than death. There is something that can wear you out more surely than disease or accident. And that is ORDINARYNESS. A carrot can safely be like all other carrots. So can a louse be like all other lice. No one cares whether a carrot or a louse has personality. These lesser forms of life were created to function in mass. They serve their purpose, whatever that may be, quite as well without the distinguishing marks of individuality.

Genius and Tuberculosis

THE German scientist, Dr. Erich Ebbstein, has devoted much labor to the study of the relationship of disease, particularly tuberculosis, to genius. In a work entitled "Tuberculosis as Destiny," Dr. Ebbstein made 50 studies of various men of prominence who have suffered from tuberculosis. He finds that these men of genius who suffered from tuberculosis fall into two large groups: those in whom the disease engendered a warm, sympathetic reaction to life, and those in whom there was an engendered an austere and gloomy attitude.

It is interesting to note how many famous men have suffered from tuberculosis. Thus we find Schiller, Goethe, Chopin, Rousseau, Keats, Goldsmith and Robert Louis Stevenson listed among the 50 reviewed.

This study is of interest in itself, but it also raises a question which is of vital concern, namely, to what extent does disease in general affect the temperament and the attitude toward life of the patient.

The acute diseases, those which develop rapidly, and which come to a quick issue, may affect the character of the patient for a brief period only.

On the other hand, a relatively chronic disease like tuberculosis, chronic rheumatism, heart disease, or a defect of the senses such as blindness or deafness, must unavoidably affect the sufferer's character. This is particularly true when the victim is young.

Frequently patients with chronic disease throw upon the physician not only the burden of caring for their sickened bodies but also that of assisting them in making an adequate psychological adjustment to their illness.

As the pearl in the oyster is the product of an injury, so, too, as is perhaps best illustrated in the life of Robert Louis Stevenson, chronic disease not infrequently brings forth the very best there is in man.

REDUCING without DIETING

LILYAN MALMSTEAD is a graduate of the Sargent School of Physical Education; instructor of physiotherapy, Children's Clinic, Schenectady and at Mount Sinai Hospital, Cleveland. Research work in physiotherapy, American Hospital, New York, Hospital des Enfants and the Great Ormond and King's College Hospitals, London. Her system results from fifteen years' intensive study.

WHAT have you done to reduce your hips? Are you among the mortals who have tried to touch the floor with your fingers? Have you tried to bend your knees? This exercise is so common that I venture to say that you have tried it. I know you are not conscious of the fact that it has actually made your hips larger. The more often this exercise is practiced the greater the increase.

Stop looking down and bending over. Look up and lean backward and try "reaching for the stars." If your weight is on your hips and the rest of your figure is quite normal, certainly you will not have to burden yourself with the reduction of the other parts of your body. Exercise only your hips. Do this every morning before breakfast.

These exercises are for body building because the system is founded on rhythm. Those who want to increase the measurements should do the exercises according to the time given. Follow strictly the exercise described below and note your decrease:

Hips. Lying with trunk on table or firm bed, raise hands over head, reaching up and holding on to sides of table with hands. (a) Raise legs up to level of table at the same time raising head. (b) Lower legs to floor and head to table. Continue for 10 times with moderate tempo. Do not do the exercise with the arms. Perform exercises with abdominal and back muscles. Time—20 seconds.

Tomorrow—Third Exercise for Hips.

WHAT TO SAY.

Dear Mrs. Post: What would a step-grandchild call a step-grandmother? My husband's daughter is only a few years younger than I, and she calls me by my first name, her little child, born since my husband and I were married, is just learning to call the different members of the family by their names. She calls my husband "grandpa," although he is only 42. I really wouldn't mind being called "grandmother," and I wouldn't mind "granny." My friends, who know I am not old enough to be a grandmother, try to tease me about it, but I am just pleased and proud of my granddaughter and would much rather not have her call me "Mama," as they think she ought to do.

Answer: I think "granny" would be rather charming. Precisely because you are so young, the name would be a pet name.

Dear Mrs. Post: When a radio announcer introduces a speaker, is it not rude for the speaker to fail to say "Thank you?"

Answer: It is very much a question of circumstances. Should an announcer make a personal remark to the speaker, the speaker would naturally answer, but to have an announcer say "You will now hear Mr. On-the-air" then Mr. On-the-air says—(pause) "Thank you, Mr. Talker." And at the end, when Mr. Talker again says, "Thank you, Mr. On-the-air," this repetition can become extremely tiresome.

Dear Mrs. Post: I am secretary to a prominent lawyer of this city. Frequently people from out-of-town come to see my employer, whom we have never seen before. When such a person introduces himself to me, should I in turn introduce myself to him? In the past when this happened and the person said, "I am Mr. Smith," I have been saying, "Yes, Mr. Smith, Mr. Brown is expecting you."

Answer: Your last suggestion is right. But should it seem better to introduce yourself, you would say, "I am Miss Jones, Mr. Brown's secretary."

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO.

There was a deliberate, sly and wickedly purposeful air about the Captain as he joined them. It colored the manner in which he growled at the men, reminding them that progress with the work was slow enough without their suspending it to stand idly by. Did they want him to spend the remainder of his life on Malaita? Then he obsequiously invited Monsieur de Bernis to find other employment, and not to stand there wasting the time of the hands.

Curling himself before the Captain's calculatedly offensive manner, Monsieur de Bernis shrugged, and began to move away without other answer. But this did not satisfy the Captain, who came briskly after him.

"Dye shrug your shoulders at me, Bernis?" he demanded, loud enough to be heard by the men.

Over his shoulder, without checking in his stride, De Bernis answered him: "What else would you have me do?"

"I'd have you attend, I'll have you know I'm captain here, and when I speak I expect an answer."

"I obeyed your wishes. Is not that answer enough?"

He halted now, confronting Leach. They had moved out of earshot of the men. But they were still under their eyes, and those eyes were watchful. The buccaniers had, indeed, the beginning of a very pretty quarrel in the Captain's opening words, and it being in their nature to love a fight, they looked on hopefully without even a pretense of attending to their work.

Leach considered the Frenchman with an eye of cordial dislike.

"Ye shrugged at me," he complained truculently. "I'll have no man shrug at me when I give orders. Lead of all a French dandy."

Monsieur de Bernis considered him in his turn. Himself armed, he observed that Leach, too, had hung a rapier at his side. Nor did a certain eagerness in Leach escape him.

"I see," he said. "Ye want to put a quarrel on me. But ye dare not do it openly, lest your followers should call you to account for it. So ye think to provoke me into striking you, with Wogan looking on up yonder. That, you suppose, will justify you in their eyes. Do I read you aright, Tom?"

The other's furious countenance told him that he did.

"Be sure as I read these aright, Charley. There's just a cowardly cuckoo, impudent as long as these counts theess sheltered."

But De Bernis laughed aloud. "Maybe you are right," said he, shamelessly. "Then he gazed. 'There's a dandy for ye, Tom. Ye may be a bit of a dandy, but this is not the time to drink it. The draught would poison you. Haven't they warned you of it?—Sundry and the others?'"

IN words at least Leach could vent some of the hatred into which De Bernis had come with him. "Ye're a paunch-bearer, even," he said, and spat deliberately in token of his contempt. Then turned on his heel, and moved away, in the direction whence Wogan was unceasingly advancing. But he went ready to swing round at the first sound behind him, confidently expecting De Bernis to throw caution to the winds before that crowning insult.

Monsieur de Bernis, however, disappointed him. He remained looking after that lecherous departing figure, with narrowing calculating eyes, and the faintest shadow of a smile upon his little dark mouth, until the Captain was joined by Wogan.

Then he, too, moved away, returning to his own side of the beach. And meanwhile there was Wogan, confronting Leach, arms akimbo and remonstrance in his lean, crafty face.

"Och, now, Captain, darlin', I was afeard you'd be lettin' your temper run away with you. Bad case to it!"

Leach laughed at him, his countenance brightened and upturned. "See there, lad! Leave me to settle my own affairs in my own way."

"Faith, but I'll be reminding you that this is the affair of all of us, so it is."

"When I settles it, I'll not forget that."

"But if ye were to kill Charley, there would..."

Scornfully Leach interrupted him. "Kill him?" He laughed aloud, in contemptuous repudiation of the notion. "Is no bungler. I know what's to do. I'm not killing him. But by Jove, I'll cut his pony carb for him. I'll mutilate him, make him helpless as he'll not swag any more."

"But that's as bad now," Wogan's sigh was clear.

"Is it?" Leach closed an eye slowly. "There's no faith in me. Once I have him powerless, crippled, does thee think I've no ways to squeeze this secret of 'n' pliers from him? Woulding man'd do it, nor a match between his toes. But there's things we might do to that proud cold piece of his, to Mistress de Bernis, things we might do under his eyes, the threat o' which would mebbe loosen his stubborn tongue. There's more ways nor one o' persuading the dumbest man to talk."

Wogan's eyes grew round in wonder. "The saints preserve us, Tom! It's a devil ye are." But his tone was one of admiration.

They departed arm in arm, to their own quarters.

Monsieur de Bernis found Miss Priscilla, who was now reduced to being her own third woman, occupied with needlework.

"What I think is of no great account. It is what I know that matters. And what I know is that I depend upon myself. Not for the first time, Major Sands."

Considering him, so straight and calm and resolute, Major Sands came nearer to admiring him than he had yet done. This, after all, seemed to be a man upon whom it was good to lean in an awkward situation.

"You have no anxieties, then?"

"Oh, yes. I have anxieties. Few things are certain in this life, however shrewdly a man may plan.

CHAPTER TWO.

I THOUGHT I knew something about man-eating tigers until I started hearing about the animal that came to be known as the Killer of Kuala.

Ever since I began to be interested in wild animals—which means my earliest boyhood, long before it became my business as well as my hobby—the subject of man-eating tigers has fascinated me, and for 18 years I have kept records of most of the important man-eaters that have been reported in various parts of Asia.

Man-eaters are not just ordinary tigers, you see, but a very special form of perversity. A normal tiger seldom attacks a man, unless he is cornered. Only a depraved tiger, usually one that is prevented by age or injury from finding his ordinary food, develops a tolerance for human flesh. But once he gets the unnatural habit, it grows on him, and he may account for several human lives unless his wild career is quickly checked.

Never in the history of any Asiatic country has there been the equal of the Killer of Kuala. Kuala is a village in the center of the great rubber-producing district of Johore.

At the time the Killer appeared on the scene, I was in Singapore, preparing for some rather elaborate motion pictures of various types of jungle beasts. I was just starting a series of trips out of Singapore to the different parts of the Malay Archipelago, where I could find the particular animals I wanted for the screen.

The Singapore newspapers had begun to run frequent items about the depredations of three man-eating tigers, which seemed almost to be competing with each other, although located in different parts of the country. There was the Killer of Kuala, and at the beginning he didn't attract as much attention as another animal that came to be known as the Tumbago Butcher.

Third place went to an animal which in our discussions we designated the Johore Mauler.

All sorts of wild rumors were flying around Singapore, blended with garbled facts and pop-eyed gossip. My room boy at the hotel tried to sell me the idea that it was attributed by the superstitious natives to the presence of the evil spirits of the Chinese immigrants who went into the section of Johore to start of fessing on the young rubber trees. He walks up and down the rubber when tigers were even a greater menace than they are to

"I shrugged my shoulders and managed somehow to get away from him. Gattie and I went on to the hotel entrance, where I bade him good-by, after promising that I would visit his plantation on my return from Siang."

"We actually might try trapping the animal," I suggested. "There's an outside chance that it would work. But you'll have to get over your stubborn idea about the bait. This killer is rusey, and he won't be interested in goats or other small animals. He wants human flesh."

"I'm distressed, atab me! I tell you frankly, da Bernis, I am distressed. You seem at odds with these buccanier rogues, Leach and the rest of them. I ask myself, if harm should come to you, what is to become of us or rather, what is to become of Priscilla."

"Can you suppose, sir, that I am not considering it?"

"You are? You fellows me a deal. Yet not altogether. The Major was very grave. 'Bear with me a moment, De Bernis. You were impatient with me once before when I asked you what is your intention by us when you sail away on this Spanish raid. Yet now that time is drawing near, I am driven to ask this again. To ask it again. You cannot surely intend that we should sail away, it would be abominable, atab me! that you should take Miss Priscilla into the horrors and the dangers of a sea-fight."

"You might remain here at Malaita until I return to take you off," said De Bernis.

"Ah! Some of the gloom lifted from the Major's countenance. 'Yes,' His tone was musing. 'It is what I had thought possible. Yet he paused, stood still, and confronted his companion. 'What if you should not return, Monsieur de Bernis?'"

"You mean?"

"You go into danger. You go into a deal of danger as it seems to me. There is danger from the Spaniards, and then there is danger from your associates. You are making bad blood with them, I fear. Bad blood, at least, after what happened yesterday with this blackguard Leach..."

"Would you have had me civil to him?"

"Sir! Sir! Can you suppose it? Stab me! The Major became consequent, on or before yourself as I would have borne myself in your place. Do not misunderstand me. What happened could not have been avoided. But it alters things between you and Leach. It would be to me that he may purb his rancor only just so long as it suits his ends. And that once you have led him to the plate fleet, once you have parried with your secret, he may take a revenge upon you, he may take this had not occurred to you."

"Oh, now, Captain, darlin', I was afeard you'd be lettin' your temper run away with you. Bad case to it!"

Leach laughed at him, his countenance brightened and upturned. "See there, lad! Leave me to settle my own affairs in my own way."

"Then you'll have to break the law," I insisted. "There are times when it's got to be done."

"I'd like to," said Gattie. "but it would raise the very devil. You know how superstitious these Chinese are. I'd never get another day's work out of them if they caught me using a body as bait."

We argued the thing back and forth for an hour or more, but I couldn't budge him. Finally we adjourned to the lobby, where we were joined by one of the town pests, the same amateur hunter who had suggested organizing an armored car expedition. He was feeling a bit humorous over the matter, I suppose, because his latest idea was that I should "go out to Gattie's place and drag the tiger back by the tail."

I shrugged my shoulders and managed somehow to get away from him. Gattie and I went on to the hotel entrance, where I bade him good-by, after promising that I would visit his plantation on my return from Siang.

"When I settles it, I'll not forget that."

"But if ye were to kill Charley, there would..."

Scornfully Leach interrupted him. "Kill him?" He laughed aloud, in contemptuous repudiation of the notion. "Is no bungler. I know what's to do. I'm not killing him. But by Jove, I'll cut his pony carb for him. I'll mutilate him, make him helpless as he'll not swag any more."

"But that's as bad now," Wogan's sigh was clear.

"Is it?" Leach closed an eye slowly. "There's no faith in me. Once I have him powerless, crippled, does thee think I've no ways to squeeze this secret of 'n' pliers from him? Woulding man'd do it, nor a match between his toes. But there's things we might do to that proud cold piece of his, to Mistress de Bernis, things we might do under his eyes, the threat o' which would mebbe loosen his stubborn tongue. There's more ways nor one o' persuading the dumbest man to talk."

Wogan's eyes grew round in wonder. "The saints preserve us, Tom! It's a devil ye are." But his tone was one of admiration.

They departed arm in arm, to their own quarters.

Monsieur de Bernis found Miss Priscilla, who was now reduced to being her own third woman, occupied with needlework.

"What I think is of no great account. It is what I know that matters. And what I know is that I depend upon myself. Not for the first time, Major Sands."

Considering him, so straight and calm and resolute, Major Sands came nearer to admiring him than he had yet done. This, after all, seemed to be a man upon whom it was good to lean in an awkward situation.

"You have no anxieties, then?"

"Oh, yes. I have anxieties. Few things are certain in this life, however shrewdly a man may plan.

FRANK BUCK outside of the famous "Tiger Temple."

spect for the dead, which goes beyond that of any other race in the world, we'll have trouble. I don't want a delegation of them going down to the capitol to look the ground over and make some suggestions?"

"All right," I said with a sigh of resignation, "have it your way. What can I do to help?"

"You said something weeks ago about building traps," said Gattie. "The natives have set out a few, but I doubt if they've studied the movements of that tiger enough to know just where the traps should be placed. How'd you like to look the ground over and make some suggestions?"

I agreed, not too enthusiastically, to try it.

"Thanks," said Gattie. "Johoral will go out with you, and later on I'll join you. He's the only boy around here who really knows just where that three-toed calling-card has turned up on this plantation, and he can be of real help to you."

Johoral and I set out for a point where Gattie's plantation borders on the jungle and here—in terms of the animal's past maneuvers, as related to me by the boy—we selected two sites for traps.

Johoral had superintended the building of tiger traps before, and it was unnecessary to give him much advice in the matter of construction. I suggested a few improvements on the type of trap he had in mind. We had started back when Gattie came up to join us and expressed his appreciation.

"Glad to help you out, Bob," I said. "But don't depend too much on those traps. This doesn't sound like a tiger that can be trapped."

I returned to Singapore late that evening, pretty much discouraged by Gattie's obstinacy about what I felt was the only possible way of dealing with this particular demon. I was even sorry that I had consented to select sites for a couple of traps, because I was sure they would accomplish nothing.

Gattie didn't come to town that week, but there was more news from the Killer. One of the shooters from an estate just south of Gattie's had been standing near the edge of the jungle waiting for a "voo-hoo" when he heard the cooing greeting him, with a characteristic "Yoo-hoo!" from a point about 150 yards off. It is customary in jungle country for people to make it known that they are approaching as soon as they are within earshot.

The shooter responded with a welcoming shout of his own. The cooing replied. The shooter greeted him again. Again the cooing "yoo-hoo!" and this time he was close. The shooter could hear him coming through the narrow brush that bordered the path along which he was walking.

"Then suddenly there was silence. The footsteps ceased. The shooter looked another 'yoo-hoo!' but there was no reply. Again he yelled. Silence once more."

Fashion Creates Exclusive Gowns For Grandmother

PARIS, Oct. 12. WHAT should grandmother wear in the year 1932? This is the big question French dressmakers are attempting to solve this season for perhaps the first time in the history of fashion.

Of course when grandmother comes to their houses they always see that she is well-fitted out with all she requires, but this year several of the big couturiers are actually showing a number of models as exclusive for granny as the youthful-looking debutante frocks are for Miss 18.

Aide from some fascinating little bonnets and shawls in finest wools, crepes and laces, there are all the gowns a modern grandmother would want. Sepia lace makes a charming one worn beneath a brown coat of ring velvet with enormous mink collar reaching to the elbows.

Faux d'ange velvet comes in an exquisite shade of green with the bodice of white rosinet cut high. waisted in empire fashion if grandmother can stand it. Over it comes a white coat of pea d'ange with collar of con feathers falling gracefully over the shoulders.

Black and white are always smart and especially for grandmother whose hair is undoubtedly gray or white. An unusual evening gown in white has a black crepe de chine coat to wear over it, with a scarf collar fastened by large pearl buttons and the twisted belt forming a bow at the back to soften the severe lines of the wrap.

And grandmother will be glad that while ermine, like the equally luxurious velvet has made a triumphant return this season. Several of the designers are using it for smart little jackets or longer coats with muffs to accompany.

Glass Stoppers. Glass stoppers in bottles will almost always break off if forced when they are stuck. Wrap a cloth wrung out of hot water around the neck of the bottle and continue these applications until the stopper is released.

Peau d'ange velvet comes in an exquisite shade of green with the edges of white remains cut high, raised in empire fashion if grandmother can stand it. Over it comes a white coat of pea d'ange with collar of coq feathers falling gracefully over the shoulders.

Black and white are always smart and especially for grandmother whose hair is undoubtedly gray or white. An unusual evening gown in white has a black rope de chine coat to wear over it, with a scarf collar fastened by large pearl buttons and the twisted belt forming a bow at the back to soften the severe lines of the wrap.

And grandmother will be glad that white ermine, like the equally luxurious velvet, has made a triumphant return this season. Several of the designers are using it for smart little jackets or long coats with muffs to accompany.

ESCAPED PRISONER GIVES HIMSELF UP AFTER 34 YEARS

W. K. Robinson, 65, Asks to Be Admitted to Leavenworth Prison to Serve Term for Robbery.

"HAUNTED," HE SAYS BY HIS OFFENSE

After Break Went to California and Prospered—Case Is Referred to U. S. Attorney-General.

By the Associated Press.
LEAVENWORTH, Kan., Oct. 13.—Haunted more than half his life by fear of capture, W. Kirby Robinson, 65 years old, seeks to serve a Federal prison sentence imposed 34 years ago which he evaded by leaping from a moving train in Indian territory.

The gray-haired father of a family in California appeared late yesterday before Warden Fred Zerbst and asked permission to enter the prison. He said he had been convicted at Fort Smith, Ark. more than three decades ago of robbing a postoffice near Little Rock and sentenced to serve four years at Leavenworth.

Without commitment papers, Warden Zerbst was forced to deny the request. Robinson voluntarily placed himself in the custody of Leavenworth police, awaiting investigation of his case.

The warden called R. E. Vetterly, agent in charge of the United States Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, at Kansas City. In the following files, Vetterly found the story of Robinson's escape. As the train roared north of Bartlesville toward Coffeyville, Kan., the prisoner worked himself free of shackles and plunged through a window.

"I changed my name to Sinclair," Robinson said. "I went to Houston, Tex., first, then spent 15 years as a school book salesman in Chicago. I saved money, went to the Imperial Valley in California, bought a share in a tourist camp and built gas stations and did well. I married twice, before the stock market crash I was worth close to $100,000. Most of it went, although I'm not broke today."

"But I want to clear this up. It's been haunting me. Then I'll go back to the Valley," Robinson, who once lived at Cabazon, Cal., recalled that in 1923-24 he was deputy sheriff in Imperial County. It was a "hobby" with him, he said, as he didn't need the salary. Vetterly telegraphed J. E. Hoover, director of the Bureau of Investigation at Washington. Hoover replied he would take the case up with Attorney-General Mitchell.

AMPUTATION WITH JACKKNIFE SAVES MAN CAUGHT IN WRECK

BOSTON, Oct. 13.—Engineer Walter B. Smith and Fireman Michael Madigan, trapped by twisted steel in the cab of their locomotive when an empty passenger train and an empty freight train collided on the Boston & Albany Railroad under Berkeley street bridge.

The engineer sat in silence while his leg was amputated with a jack knife just above the ankle in order to release him.

Dr. Maurice O'Connell, city hospital surgeon, passing the scene, hurried through the crowd to give first aid. He saw an amputation was necessary. He was without his medical kit. From the cab window, Dr. O'Connell shouted to the crowd: "Have anyone got a jack knife?"

Several knives were offered. Dr. O'Connell selected one and went to work. An hour later rescuers with axes and oxyacetylene torches freed Madigan who was caught at the waist. Both injured men were taken to this city hospital.

Kills Eagle With Pig in Talons.
BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 13.—John Mulcahey, 27, pig in the talons of a hawk, perched in the top of a tall tree. One shot from Mulcahey's shotgun brought down the bird, which measured 7 feet 4 inches between wing tips. The pig was killed in the fall.
